Hardin, Soshnik Present Budget To Legislature

In a presentation before the legislature Monday, Chancellor Clifford Hardin and Joseph Soshnik, Comptroller of the University, gave the University's case for an increase of nine million dollars in the University budget during the next biennium.

"In recent years," said Hardin, "the potential impact of the large comprehensive university on the economy of the area which it serves, has become clearly evident."

Speaking before the legislature's Budget Committee, Hardin continued, "You have only to look at the effect on the California state institutions, those in the Boston area, in North Carolina, in Illinois and Indiana to see what can happen when universities are permitted to develop extraordinary competence in the advanced areas of human knowledge."

"No one can remake the past," he said, "nor should we attempt it. But it is hard to avoid wondering what kind of industrial development might have occurred in Nebraska in such fields as nuclear science, electronics, and space if ten or fifteen years ago we had elected to pursue a course similar to these other states."

Both Hardin and Soshnik were emphatic in their stressing faculty loss as a reason for passage of the University's budget requests. "We're losing too many now for a good operation," Hardin said. Soshnik agreed, stating that about fifty out of the five hundred professors, associate professors and assistant professors on the Lincoln campus have left and had to be replaced during the current biennium.

The overall University budget request, including federal funds, fees and other sources of revenue, is $47,083,905. The general fund request for the 1963-65 biennium is $8,895,987 more than the $28,096,000 the Legislature appropriated to it for the current two-year fiscal period.

Soshnik pointed out that professors at the University receive, on the average, $10,878, where the regional average is $12,260. Associate professors, assistant professors, and instructors at the University also receive lower salaries than the average given to comparative teachers in this region.

The proposed salary increases, according to Chancellor Hardin, would boost Nebraska to "about midpoint" in the Big Eight and "a little below the middle" in the 12-state Great Lakes and Plains regions.

Psychologist Will Leave This Summer

Dr. Marshall Jones To Work At Miami

Dr. Marshall Jones, professor and director of the clinical psychological training program at the University, has announced his resignation effective at the end of the 1963 summer session.

Dr. Jones will assume the chairmanship of the department of psychology at the University of Miami this fall.

He has been a member of the faculty here for 14 years. For 11 years he has edited the Nebraska Symposium of Motivation and has published an article on graduate training for community clinical psychology in the April edition of the American Psychologist.

He issued the following statement concerning his resignation: "Both my family and I are reluctant to leave Lincoln and the University. We have enjoyed living and rearing our children in Lincoln, and for several years, the University provided me with many opportunities for professional growth and development."

"However, the opportunity to have an active part in the growth of the University and department of psychology which seem to have a great deal more potential for progressing than now seems likely at the University of Nebraska, the very considerably higher salary and other economic advantages, and the greater opportunity for personal professional development make it impossible for me to pass up this opportunity."

After obtaining his Ph.D. at Yale, Jones taught at the Cornell Medical College and spent 30 months as a clinical psychologist in WW II. Before coming to the University he taught at the University of Iowa.

NU Board Approves Corps Site

Establishment of a Peace Corps training site this summer at the University now hinges on the signing of a contract by the State Department in Washington, D.C.

The University's Board of Regents approved the contract Monday, which calls for training up to 75 Peace Corps volunteers for specialized instructional work in Ecuador. Federal funds will finance the project.

Chancellor Clifford Hardin said Gov. Frank Morrison and his staff were instrumental in assisting with the arrangements for the Nebraska training site.

The volunteers, with a wide age distribution, will be housed in the Hall of Youth of the Nebraska Center on the College of Agriculture campus. They will study under a handicapped University staff in special classes.

Max Hansen, assistant professor of industrial arts, has been named director of the project and is now in the process of assembling a staff.

He said the 75 Peace Corps volunteers — about one-third women — will arrive on the campus June 13 and depart Sept. 3.

The University program will train the volunteers to assist the Ecuadorean government in its newly established vocational training program at all levels of their educational system.

The volunteers are expected to alleviate the acute shortage of trained industrial education and home economics teachers.
