

For Second Consecutive Year—

J-School Earns Top National Ranking

Washington, D.C. — The University School of Journalism, for the second consecutive year, was recognized in White House ceremonies yesterday for its number-one ranking among the nation's accredited journalism schools.

President John F. Kennedy presented University officials with the first-place trophy of the 1963 William Randolph Hearst competition.

Accepting for the University were Dr. Ben Graenberg of York, president of the Board of Regents, Dr. William Hall, director of the School of Journalism, and Judy Harrington, a senior journalism student who won the individual second-place national award.

Dr. Hall and Miss Harrington will accept for the School the additional first place prize of $2,000 from the Hearst Foundation in New York today and will be guests of the Nebraska senatorial delegation.

The students whose award-winning depth reporting articles were responsible for the school's first place honors are:

Anda Anderson, a story on the Gresham bank embezzlement and the bank's subsequent failure, the human aspects of a community disaster that received attention over the entire country. Miss Anderson's second story on public power dealt with the conflicts in the area of distributing power to the retail customer.

Norman Beatty, "Nebraska Football Fans in a Winning Year," dealing with the effect this had on the University and the state; a second story examining Nebraska's innovation in agricultural research and the men behind it.

Cloyd Clark, "The Teacher who Flunked Red Grange," an entertaining story of a young English teacher who falled the famous football player in school;

Donald Ferguson, "Are Fraternities Dinosaurs?" This story, run in newspapers coast-to-coast, asked and tried to answer the question: "Can fraternities become contributing members of the modern academic community?"

Judy Harrington, "The Plight of the Escaped Mental Inmate." This story told of inept law and its result on escaped mental inmates.

Linda Jensen, an editorial published in the Daily Nebraskan, student newspaper at the University. It was written in response to an attack on the Nebraskan's policies.

Nancy Whitford Ostberg, "The Return of the Classics to the Classroom," a story telling of the renewed use of the classics of literature in the modern English classroom.

Dr. Hall explained that the stories this year were designed for regional interest — the Midwest — instead of national interest.

This year's win against the nation's other accredited journalism schools was more decisive than last year's, he said.

"While Nebraska edged the University of Kansas last year by 10 points, this year's margin over second-place University of Texas was 85 points."

Four Nebraska students, Miss Harrington, Miss Anderson, Beatty and Clark placed individually in the top ten nationally on the basis of points won during the seven months of competition. Seven Nebraska students this year scored at least once in the monthly competitions as opposed to four last year.

R. Neale Copple, associ-

those youngsters have more hard work ahead of them."

Professor Copple's class in depth reporting was started three years ago as an experiment to upgrade the quality of newswriting instruction. He has been assisted from the beginning by Mrs. Emily Trickey, research assistant.

During this period, articles by students enrolled in the class have been read by millions. They have resulted in financial awards to the school and individual students in excess of $20,000. Professor Copple could not attend the Washington ceremonies because of last-minute revisions on a depth-reporting book which will be published shortly.

Dr. Hall noted that the winning students have held part-time jobs throughout their entire college career in paying all or part of their college costs. Three of the seven have served as editors of the Daily Nebraskan.

"Again it is important to note that this victory would not have been possible without the financial assistance of the Newspaper Fund Inc. of the Wall Street Journal and the Reader's Digest Foundation," Copple said. "It is also significant that two of the other high-ranking schools had outside financial support. The time is here for the profession of journalism to realize that the kinds of free enterprise funds being fed into these programs is as vital as the equipment for a physics department or any of the sciences."

Dr. Hall also lauded the support of all newspapers in Nebraska who have assisted the J-School students with scholarships, summer internships and the opportunity to take part in field trips. "The editors and newspapers as well as many government and private industry executives deserve to share in the honor. They let themselves be used almost as guinea pigs as news sources for these young people."

Miller Announces Economics Class To Be Televised

Economics 11 will be taught to over 600 University students by television next fall, according to Charles Miller, dean of the College of Business Administration.

"For the college of Business Administration," said Dean Miller, "this is an experiment, and we'd prefer to do our experimenting before a great influx of students arrives. We expect, for example, a substantial increase in the fall of 1965."

The course will be taught by Dr. Campbell McConnell, professor of economics. Dr. McConnell has recently published the second edition of his book, Economics: Principles, Problems, and Policies.

According to Jack McBride, director of University television, Dr. McConnell will meet a part of his 8 a.m. section of Economics 11 in one of the University's TV studios.

This session will probably consist of about 20 students in a simulated classroom situation. Dr. McConnell's lecture will be put on video tape and simultaneously broadcast by closed circuit television to the main segment of the class.

This lecture will be rebroadcast at 9, 10, and 11 a.m., and at 1, 2, and 4 p.m. McBride said that there are four classrooms in the Social Science Building which are wired for the closed circuit programs.

Any one or all of 107 B, 205, 217 and 314, could be used at one time for the broadcasts.

"There will be a provision made for discussion concerning the content of the lectures at some time following them," said Dean Miller. "It is not our intention to preserve them for subsequent use," he added.

There will be a total of 11 sections which will receive the lecture by television, according to McBride. "This will be the largest closed circuit instructional project to date," he said.

May Proclaimed 'Clean Up' Time

Gov. Frank Morrison and Mayor D. L. Tyrell have proclaimed May the "Clean Up, Paint Up, Fix Up" month in Nebraska and the city of Lincoln.

It is sponsored and promoted by KFQR and is enlisting the aid of service organizations to help give the state and city a cleaner, more beautiful atmosphere.

Careless Workers Cause Minor Fire

A minor fire broke out behind Twin Towers last night at about 8:45 p.m. No damage resulted, as the fire was confined to some refuse.

Firemen on the scene attributed the fire to a bonfire which workmen had neglected to extinguish.

A campus policeman was quoted as saying that a similar bonfire was extinguished by campus policemen only the night before, and that the actions of the workmen involved were rather careless.

Letters Call Dr. Reinhardt 'Outstanding'

Two letters have been received nominating Dr. James Reinhardt, professor of criminology, for the title of Outstanding Nebraskan.

"Dr. Reinhardt's reputation," read one letter, "as an author, lecturer and teacher has been clearly established."

"Only last week," it continued, "Dr. Reinhardt was elected to the Police Hall of Fame for Distinguished Service, becoming the first educator to receive such a distinction."

His "skill in dealing with students," read part of the other nominating letter, "makes his courses among the most popular in the University. His services for consultation are sought by educators and law officers from all over the country innumerable times each year."

One letter noted that although recognition at local levels is often overlooked and services are taken for granted, higher authorities objectively evaluate and honor deserving persons. Dr. Reinhardt, continued the letter, has been one such person.

Reinhardt has reached the University's mandatory retirement age. "It is therefore only fitting that NU students recognize his service to their University, as others have recognized his service to his profession, by naming a truly Outstanding Nebraskan."

Peace Corps Staff Arrives To Explain Pilot Program

Three Peace Corps representatives will arrive on campus today to publicize the opportunities and needs of the Peace Corps.

On Monday, four other Key Peace Corps staff members will arrive to conduct interviews, administer the test and follow through on information opportunities set up by the advance team.

These officers will be able to discuss completely any aspect of the Peace Corps program in classes where professors would want an interpretation of the programs as it relates to students' areas of interest.

The three team members to arrive today are R. B. Finch, Robert Bryan and Miss Barbara Larrey. They will be available for visits in organized living units at the request of the living unit.

The program is oriented mainly toward seniors.

Lloyd Wright, Acting Associate Director, said, "We have requests for several hundred more volunteers for training this summer than the present pool of candidates.

Gov. Morrison Declares: 'NU Budget Can't Be Cut'

The Legislature cannot cut back the budget recommendation of $33 million from the general fund for the University without hurting the institution, said Gov. Frank Morrison Monday.

"I have no ambition for the University to keep up with other Big Eight institutions—I don't want anybody to be superior to the University in educational and research programs," he continued.

Questioned on why he had cut the University's request from $37 to $33 million, the Governor said that people who think spending money is the answer to all problems are suffering from a disease. He said that money was "necessary" but that it was not the only factor to be considered.

Morrison noted that in his budget message to the Legislature he had recommended pursuit of a systematic program of increasing the University's budget to where it would be double its present size in ten years—an increase of 20% each biennium.

The Governor's recommendation for a $5 million increase next biennium is just under 18% compared with the University's request for $9 million more, which would equal a 33% increase over current appropriations.

"There was some question in my mind whether the University could assimilate a full 30% increase in one biennium," the Governor said.

Morrison also said he believed that he had recommended a greater increase, percentage wise, for NU than the governors of surrounding states had backed for their universities.

He made the statements in connection with a defense of his support for education in which he claimed that contrary to assertions made in a recently published story, he believes he has given "more than lip-service" to education.

"In the area of assuming responsibility on my own, I have appointed a committee on higher education, worked with the committee on mentally retarded, and reactivated ... the committee on the gifted child," Morrison added.

He also cited trips he has made to Washington as liaison between educational institutions in the state and the federal government and the resulting research center established at Mead, and the one slated at Clay Center, as well as laying the groundwork with the Atomic Energy Commission for research in which the University would participate.

Concerning the financing of educational television, Morrison said he favored having new specific taxes on cigarettes or liquor or a direct appropriation. The Educational Committee has cut out the bill's proposed .33 of a mill special levy.

Baldwin Receives $2,400 Fellowship

Stanley Baldwin, a senior at the University, has been awarded a $2,400 National Defense Education Act Fellowship to study English at the University of Kentucky.

Baldwin will be working toward his Ph.D. in English.

PTP, MSPE To Sponsor Conference

The Western Chapter of Missouri Society of Professional Engineers (MSPE) and the University Program of People to People are sponsoring an international student engineering conference to be held in Kansas City, Mo., tomorrow through Saturday.

The program for the conference will include lectures and discussions tomorrow on "Engineers in Industry, Private Practice and Government"; tours and lectures that afternoon; and a Missouri River Excursion which will be held on the Corps of Engineers river boat "Sargeant Floyd" late in the afternoon and early evening.

All participants must be male students from other countries who are currently enrolled in schools or departments of engineering and who plan to pursue an engineering career upon their graduation.

All application forms must be filled out and returned to the office of the dean of engineering or foreign student advisor's office.

Three Plead Not Guilty To Stealing Fixtures

Three University students have pleaded not guilty to charges of petty larceny in connection with the disappearance of fixtures from the Ames house at 1750 So. 20th, according to Deputy County Attorney William Blue.

The students, Robert Geisler, Harold Dehart and William Welsh, were arrested on May 8. Their hearing is scheduled to come before Lancaster County Court June 5.

Ford Foundation Expert Checks Nebraska ETV

Dr. Theodore Conant, Ford Foundation specialist in ETV, was in Lincoln last week monitoring work that is being done in instructional television by Nebraska schools.

Dr. Conant, who has been with the Ford Foundation since 1960, has been continuing the work in school television begun by Dr. Alexander Stoddard, a former Nebraska superintendent of schools in Los Angeles, and author of the book, Schools for Tomorrow: and Educator's Blueprint.

During his stay here, Dr. Conant investigated the extent to which the Ford Foundation grants have been profitably used in furthering the use of instructional television in the state.

Conant was able to preview programs, talk to studio teachers and producers and observe instructional television actually being used in classrooms in the Channel 12 area.

The Nebraska Council for Educational Television, Inc., and KUON-TV have received $21,250 from the Ford Foundation this year. In past years, KUON-TV has received over $27,000 from the Foundation.
