Towers To Host Sunday Reception

The University's newest dormitories, Pound and Catharine Halls, are expected to be humming with activity Sunday afternoon, Nov. 24, when the doors swing wide for an open house.

Students and counselors will serve as hosts at the open house which begins at 3 p.m. Sunday. Those attending will have a chance to view student rooms, dining areas and lounges in the modern facility.

Lower floors of two, 13-story dormitories consist of lounge areas, complete mailing facilities, and living accommodations for resident directors. The remaining 12 stories of each wing contain two-occupant rooms, each with single beds, desks and storage closets.

The exterior of the steel and concrete structure is made up of pre-cast concrete wall panels embedded with marble and quartz chips. The light aggregate was selected to blend with the color of the red brick of the older women's dormitories immediately to the west.

Professor Hitchcock will give an illustrated lecture, open to the public, entitled "Aalto vs. Aalto, the Other Finland."

Breckenridge Speaks At Business Meeting

University schools of business offer the best opportunity for development of the traits required in future business leaders, a group of businessmen was told this week.

Vice Chancellor A. C. Breckenridge addressed a luncheon meeting of the Midwest Feed Manufacturers Association at the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education.

Representatives from 26 states and four foreign countries are attending the meeting here.

"This development of business leaders not only includes undergraduate training, he said, but carries through into the need for continuing education."

"Nowhere, it seems to me," Breckenridge said, "has this become more evident than in requests for institutes and conferences such as this one."

In addition, he said, the rapid changes of today require research which only the very large businesses can afford on their own, but which are available to smaller business through the staffs of colleges and universities.

"Changing society, changing future demands, a shifting complex for the student who has passed through academic halls, produce demands upon university staffs and resources for assistance of every type," Breckenridge said.

This, he said, pushes educators to keep their programs geared to the needs of business and the future needs of their students.

"To ground the student in what are traditionally called fundamentals and still fit him for certain important areas of business operations is no mean task."

He pointed out that the emerging nations, particularly those of Africa, do not stress a need for the material things of Western civilization as much as for education.

"Our educational endeavor," he said, "the most embracing, most all-inclusive in the world, is taken for granted by most Americans."

"But I submit that unless we are alert to its problems and provide for its support, the chinks and crevices which will appear will not only make it less effective but also less responsive to the needs of our ever-changing society," Breckenridge said.

Shapiro Honored For Poetry Work

Karl Shapiro, Pulitzer Prize-winning poet and professor of English, has won the 1963 Oscar Blumenthal Award for Poetry.

The award is given each November for outstanding literary work appearing in the Poetry Magazine during the first year. Professor Shapiro accepted the award and a $100 stipend in Chicago Thursday evening.

He won the award for a selection of poems published first in the November 1962 issue of Poetry Magazine, and which will be published by Random House this spring in Professor Shapiro's most recent book entitled "The Bourgeois Poet."
