No Admini Approval On 'Open Campus'

No Action Will Be Taken Against Students: Martin

J. Winston Martin, dean of men, told the Interfraternity Council (IFC) Wednesday night that, although no action will be taken against houses which took advantage of the "open campus" (laxity of liquor law enforcement) following the victory over Oklahoma University, Administration had not ordered the open campus and is determined that such a practice will not happen in the future.

According to observers at the meeting, Martin disclaimed any approval on the part of Administration, saying that the policy originated with the University Police.

Policy Set: Masters

Staff Reporter

Capt. Eugene Masters, head of the University Police, stated that as far as he was concerned, "There can be no liquor in organized houses at any time. This is an Administration policy, and we can do nothing about it."

However, conflicting reports have been received. One fraternity member was hashing in a sorority house, and he heard the University Police come in. He did not hear directly what was said, but later asked a campus police officer "Can we drink in the houses?" The officer replied, "We won't check tonight." Captain Masters commented that "We (University Police) didn't check any less that night than any other."

One fraternity housemother said that she heard the open campus rumor from some of the members of her house. She said "no" to inquiries about drinking from members of her house. Later she called the campus police to ask about the rumors.

The officer who answered said that this was out of their jurisdiction because "houses were not state property," according to the housemother. Later she found that the house land was state property, and that liquor was not allowed.

When the members again asked her for permission, she told them that since there was so much confusion, they could do as they wished, but without her on the premises. She then left campus.

One new housemother asked another about the meaning of the term, "open house." The second housemother asked her why she wanted to know and the new housemother said, that she was told by the University police that an open house was permissible.

Several girls said that the University Police came to their houses during mealtime and told them, "Our eyes are closed to everything except fights and property damage." They then added that classes would not be held Monday and Tuesday.

At another house the girls were told by University Police officers, "Tonight is a free night, everything goes except fights and property damage."

One girl said that she heard officers say that "the campus is yours. You have to be off by Sunday Night and not be back till the next Sunday. Avoid fights and property damage, otherwise our eyes are blinded."

A fraternity housemother stated that she overheard officers talking. "They gave me the impression that the lid was off," she said. She also said she overheard them note that they didn't want anyone driving around, or having woodies and that they could have a good time and be safe if they stayed on campus. Evidently they had a good time, she added.

There were also rumors that alcoholic beverages were consumed in the Union. Allen Bennett, director of the Student Union, said that, "To the best of our knowledge there was no drinking in the Student Union." Bennett noted he was out of town that weekend. Rich Harris, the night manager of the Union, who was off duty, said that he did not believe there was drinking in the Union.

Bob Barnes, Student Union assistant director, said that he left at 6:30 p.m. and no drinking took place while he was there. He said further, that he was sitting with two University Police officers, and that evidently they saw nothing either.

Bennett stated that he knew nothing about the rumors until Monday morning when he had a conference with Vice Chancellor G. Robert Ross, dean of the student affairs, and J. Winston Martin, dean of men. According to Bennett, they said, "What is this about drinking in the Union?" He stated that to the best of his knowledge, there was no drinking in the Union.

"The building policy is dictated by the University, and I do not believe that there has been any change in their policy," Bennett said. He continued, "Any member of the staff permitting this to happen would be subject to dismissal. There have been a few incidents in the past, but none that night."

Vote Results Against Reds In Venezuela

Dr. Roberto Esquenazi-Mayo, associate professor of romance languages, said that the heavy turnout in the recent Venezuelan presidential election and the large vote in favor of anti-communist candidates shows a definite and encouraging trend against communism and Castro terrorism in Latin America.

Over 90 per cent of the voters went to the polls Sunday in what amounted to a cold rejection of the communists. With 70 per cent of the vote counted, Raul Leoni held a strong lead with 418,183 votes, over Rafael Caldera, who drew 295,355. Both strongly denounce Communism and Castroism.

In the weeks preceding the election, red terrorists conducted a campaign of fire and blood in an effort to frighten the people away from the polls, he said.

Dr. Esquenazi explained that their objective was to bring about a state of chaos in order to necessitate a military dictatorship. The Communists have much to gain from military rule, because it is unpopular and causes the dissatisfaction which the communists must have to make gains in a country.

The fact that the intimidation tactics failed, he indicated, is partly due to the present popular Betancourt administration.

President Betancourt, said Dr. Esquenazi, is an able statesman and a sincere friend of the United States. Leoni, the heir-apparent, belongs to the same party and philosophy as the President, and has stated that the very presence of Fidel Castro in Cuba is dangerous to Latin American security, he said.

Code Course Offered Soon

A special course in Fortran coding will be offered the public and staff members of the University of Nebraska beginning Monday.

The course, which involves the fundamentals of computer usage, covers the rules of formula translation and allows persons to learn the algebraic oriented language without having to know the internal computer structure.

Dr. Don J. Nelson, director of the University Computing Center, will conduct the classes to be held at the Computing Center from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. on the Mondays of Dec. 9 and 16, and Jan. 6, 13 and 20.

Theater Sets Play Schedule

The Eugene O'Neill play, "Long Day's Journey Into Night," which will be presented in the University Theater Dec. 1-14, will be an uncut version of the play lasting about three and one-half hours, according to Dr. William Morgan, assistant professor of speech and dramatic art.

Permission to give the play as an amateur production, granted by O'Neill's widow, Carlotta Monterey O'Neill, specifies that the play must be acted in its original form.

Dr. Morgan added that some controversy has arisen because of the length of "Long Day's Journey Into Night." Paul Baker, former director of the Dallas and Baylor Theaters, resigned because his superiors demanded that the length be cut, contrary to contract commitments.

'Satchmo' To Appear Here

Louis Armstrong and his Concert Group will be at the Student Union Ballroom for two shows at 7 and 9 p.m. Dec. 12. The concert is sponsored by the special events committee of the Union.

Tickets are on sale now in the Union at $1.75 for reserved seats, and $1.50 for general admission seats.

Louis 'Satchmo' Armstrong started in New Orleans where he first learned to play the coronet, and by ear. He did not learn how to read music until he learned how to play the bugle a year later.

In 1922, Armstrong went to Chicago to play in King Oliver's band and it was with Oliver that he made his first recordings. By 1925 Armstrong was one of the most famous trumpeters in America.

In New York Armstrong and the revue "Ain't Misbehavin'" became the hit of the 1930s. From New York he went to Hollywood and then back to Chicago.

He didn't remain in Chicago long. His recording of "You Rascal, You" had been a great hit in England, and when he arrived in London he proceeded to break the all-time record for a band at London's Palladium Theatre. He then toured all over Europe.

Since 1923 Armstrong has put at least a thousand numbers on records, and many of these sell for $20 or more as collector's items today. Among his best-known recordings are "Shine," "Chinatown," "Tiger Rag," and "I Can't Give You Anything But Love."

Armstrong is also an unofficial goodwill ambassador for America. He has proved a spectacular success in his tours of Africa and Europe.

LOUIS 'SATCHMO' ARMSTRONG—will perform in the Student Union Thursday.
