Two Teacher's Representatives Show Committee Leadership

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following evaluation is the third in a series compiled by the Student Council reporters of the last two semesters. This article concerns the representatives from Teachers College.

By Frank Partsch
Senior Staff Writer

A Student Council member can become outstanding in two different ways: he may find a new issue and distinguish himself with a key motion, program or speech; or he may take on a committee chairmanship and carry it out in a superior manner.

Examples of the former are the welfare committee's work to solve the football ticket seating problem and the motions calling for a discrimination study by Ann Wahl and Joann Stratmann. Two examples of the latter can be found among the Teachers College representatives, Trudy Erwin, Mike Barton, Denny Bergen and Doug Thom.

Thom suggested last year that the associates elect officers and have a regular council member to speak for them in Council. The associates program was partially revamped this year, but Thom's activity centered around the public issues, peace corps and student tribunal committees.

Thom's work in planning, supervising and organizing Peace Corps Week in March was his outstanding project of the year. His work drew recognition and appreciation from the Peace Corps recruiting team from Washington.

Barton's platform included assessing student opinion to aid the Council in formulating policy, expansion of publicity and polls, making recommendations on relevant issues and implementation of Council representation amendments.

As chairman of the student opinion and public relations committees, Barton effected one of the most accurate cases of a representative's following his platform that can be found on this year's Council. Opinion polls, such as the drinking surveys in January, were used in formulating policy.

His interest in clearly defined representation is reflected in his active discussion in the recent representation debates and his opposition to encumbering Council representation without a practical basis.

Miss Erwin said "the functions of Student Council are to act as an intermediary body between the faculty, administration and the students, and between the students themselves to set up the governing rules of conduct."

This is the general type of platform which can easily be evaded. But Miss Erwin was subsequently appointed to head the activities committee, which, although not a publicity-attracting position, requires responsible service. The evaluation of the status of the myriad of campus organizations can easily be interpreted as setting up "rules of conduct" between the students.

Bergen's platform included better lighting facilities in parking areas, the abolishment of compulsory ROTC, selection of cheerleaders by the Council and city parking for Ag students.

Council President Dennis Christie explained last week that the Council originally had jurisdiction over the selection of cheerleaders, but had delegated the power to a faculty committee under the constitution. The intercampus bus alleviated the necessity for parking on city campus. Bergen did not serve on the student welfare committee, which indicated a desire to work with the ROTC proposal, and he indicated to the DAILY NEBRASKAN yesterday that some lighting has been added to campus parking areas.

Barton mentioned that another duty of the Council is to provide an opportunity for students to "function practically in committee areas." Committee work, again, remains mostly behind the scenes and attracts little attention. Bergen served on the associates and election committees.
