Attending Church Said Not 'Status Symbol'

Religiosity is less fashionable and acceptable than church attendance and public display of religiosity is not acceptable while outside of church according to a recent poll taken by the University Council on Religion.

The Student Directory was used to pick a random sample of 100 students. Seventy-one of these students were finally contacted, fifty-one of which were men and twenty women.

Seven out of the 20 women were affiliated with sororities and 19 out of 51 men were in fraternities. Also 55 of the 71 were living off campus. Of these 71 students there were 17 freshmen, 11 sophomores, 17 juniors, 19 seniors and seven graduates.

Fifty-three of these students believed in life after death, while 16 did not. On church attendance it was found 38 per cent attended every Sunday, 48 per cent attended from one to three times a month and 14 per cent never attended.

Eighty-one per cent of those students attending church and living on campus attended a campus church. Only one fourth of the students living off campus and attending church went to campus churches. About one third of those not attending a campus church belonged to a faith not represented by churches on campus.

It was found that one half of the seniors and freshman attended church while only one-third of the sophomores and one-fourth of the juniors attended. Also no freshman was found in the category of never attending church. The poll showed that proportionately out of the number that never attended church there were four times as many men than women. However of these who did attend church the number was proportionately equal.

The poll inquired as to additional religious activity and found that only nine out of 71 attended evening fellowship and only five of these were regular attenders. Only 12 of the 71 participated in activities other than Sunday worship and Evening Fellowship. Six of these 12 only attended mid-week meetings and this was primarily during Lent.

A comparison of Greek participation and independent participation in church was taken with the following results. Approximately 30 per cent of the Greeks attended church at least one to four times per month while 30 per cent never attended. Sixty per cent of the independents attended one to four times a month and only about four per cent never attended.

On attitudes toward church attendance, six were favorable, nine indifferent or no comment and one unfavorable. These statistics were acquired from only questioning 33 of the 71.

This subsample was also questioned on the acceptance of religion on campus. Most felt that it wasn't particularly fashionable while on the other hand it wasn't necessarily unfashionable to attend church.

Some of the comments received on this question were "not a status symbol for the majority of students," "It is a matter of convenience," "not as popular as at home," "75 per cent should; 25 per cent do" and "The thing to do unless you are up late the night before."

In conclusion, most felt that the amount of religiosity acceptable was a personal matter and tolerance was a more important attribute.

Pesticide Problems Treated In Course

The problems of health and safety brought about by increased use of insecticides and pesticides in agriculture will be the topics of discussion at a special course at the University College of Medicine in Omaha June 8-9.

The College of Medicine is joining the College of Agriculture in this course for physicians and agricultural technical personnel. University spokesmen said that this appears to be the first such course offered in this country.

Late Director's Name To Illinois Auditorium

Illinois Wesleyan University, Bloomington, on Memorial Day will name and dedicate its newly-remodeled music auditorium in honor of the late Dr. Arthur E. Westbrook, former dean of its School of Music and former director of the School of Fine Arts at the University of Nebraska.

Westbrook came to Nebraska in 1939 and served with the University until 1957, when he retired as professor emeritus. Among other programs, he inaugurated the summer All-State fine arts course which this year will have a record enrollment of high school students at the University of Nebraska.

ly in agriculture, the physician "may be hard put to know what chemical is the cause of the poisoning," said Carl Potthoff, M.D., professor of preventive medicine and public health, and coordinator of the course.

"Since therapy must be quick and specific," he continued, "this knowledge may mean life or death. People who use these materials should know what they are using so they can pass the information to their physician in case of accident."

"When a person becomes systemically sick because of these poisons he will know it," Potthoff said, "it is not a silent thing."

The guest faculty for the course includes Evert Atkinson, Food and Drug Administration, Kansas City, Mo.; Griffith Quinby, M.D., Consultant, Communicable Disease Center, Wenatchee, Wash.

Alexej Borkovec, Ph. D., Chemosterilants Investigations, Pesticide Chemicals Research Branch, Agricultural Research Center, Beltsville, Md.; Carl Pirkle, M.D., Medical Officer, Toxicology Section, Communicable Disease Center, Atlanta, Ga.; C. Boyd Shaffer, Ph.D. Director of Environmental Health, American Cyanamid Company, Wayne, N.J.

Potthoff pointed out that these poisons are essential to modern agriculture, due to the fact that even with them in use, pests still cause 15 billion dollars worth of crop destruction each year.
