

Coeds Begin School Year With Passing Of Candles

Great Big, Uh, Hairy Chested Men Return To Relinquish Diamond, Fraternity Pins

University men flocked back to campus last week and assembled themselves into several lines. Some bought football tickets, some dropped and added and many bought diamonds.

Five more hesitant males, anxious to get in on the act in some way, went on record by relinquishing their pins.

The Daily Nebraskan did not escape the wave of amorosity, losing its one and only senior staff writer to Derek Mumford from London, England. Mumford is presently working in Lincoln. Miss Mullins, who joined the staff last year, is a junior in journalism from Lincoln.

atrice, to Jerry Jones, Beta Sigma Psi, junior in Arts and Sciences from Beatrice.

Student Employment Service Successful In Finding Jobs

The cost of college is going up and with it the need for student employment.

As the need for jobs increases many students are turning to the University's Student Employment Service, according to Larry Salmon, aid adviser.

The Service has been successful in securing jobs for most of the students interviewed and in many cases has been able to mate the students University training to the practical on the job experience.

From July 1, 1963 to June 30, 1964 the Service interviewed 5,364 students and placed them in both on and off campus positions. The largest groups interviewed were freshmen, sophomores and juniors, while seniors and graduates comprised a smaller percentage of the job seeking students.

Enthusiasm, concern, and curiosity prevail at the Peace Corps Training Center at the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education.

Deon D. Axthelm, Director of the Peace Corps Training at the University, said that these are the general views, but 63 trainees who are at the University are working to assist the farmers to produce and utilize small animals and garden produce for better diets for the family.

The students will remain trainees until they have passed all their training. There are no quotas as to the number of persons sent to a country, all who pass are given their chance to partake in the program.

There are two different training sessions. The first involves class work where trainees take 190 class hours of specialized agriculture and 280 hours of Spanish.

The language study is different from a course taught in the University. There is no study of grammar, there is no vocabulary as such, and there is no reading. The trainees are taught to speak the language in an audiolingual laboratory. They study phrases associations and idioms.

Two of the instructors are from Colombia, having lived in this country for many years, and attended college at the University of Denver. One, Francisco Romero said that he has great enthusiasm for the program.

"I think that this program will work because it is better than just sending money which most people in the country never see. The Peace Corps gets in and works with the people, and it shows them what Americans are like," Romero said.

The instructors said they had many concepts of Americans before they volunteered to work for the program, and their ideas of Americans haven't changed a great deal.

The trainees feel that they can really help these people. But even more so, they feel that they can help themselves. They want to find out if they can live as people do in other countries, and even more to find out what other people are like.

Tom Gallaher, a trainee from New York City, said, "I expected more field work than we have received so far. I joined because I wanted to see another culture, and help them to better themselves. I am impressed with the enthusiasm and solidarity of the group."

The South Americans feel that this program will help the Continent grow closer together. Romero said "The countries in Latin America have many problems in common. In the past this has kept them apart instead of helping them to work together to solve them all mutually. With this program, I feel that these problems will be solved, and that the continent will be able to work together in harmony."

Romero said that his countrymen have three views of Americans. They are of the diplomats who drive around in big cars and don't care for the people. They go to the country clubs and other places where there are few citizens. The second people they see are the tourists who walk around giving people five dollars to line up their families for a picture. The third group, and he hopes the true group, is that of the Peace Corps workers.

Air Force Leader Zuckert Will Speak At Convocation

Secretary of the Air Force Eugene Zuckert will speak at a University convocation Oct. 16, Chancellor Clifford Hardin and the University convocations committee announced today.

Zuckert will discuss the role of the United States Air Force in the defense of the free world at the all-University convocation at 11:30 a.m., Oct. 16, in the Coliseum. All University classes will be dismissed for the convocation which will be open to the public.

On the afternoon of Oct. 17, Zuckert will be introduced at the Nebraska-Kansas State football game.

A native of New York City, Zuckert's public service career began in the field of law when as a graduate of Yale and of the combined Yale and Harvard law-business course, he served with the Securities Exchange Commission. From 1940 to 1944 he was a faculty member and assistant dean of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

After duty in the office of Chief of Naval Operations, he was appointed assistant secretary of the Air Force and began a career which led to further service as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission and, since 1961, as secretary of the Air Force.

He has earned recognition as an authority on aerospace research and development, especially in areas designed to strengthen our system of defense. He has demonstrated a firm commitment to the advancement of aerospace through instruction at various levels of our educational structure and has maintained an interest in Nebraska's contributions to this effort.

In addition, he has found time to serve a number of humanitarian endeavors including sponsorship of the HOPE ship, a part of the People-To-People program. He co-authored a book on "Atomic Energy for Your Business."
