-200 OFF-CAMPUS-

Coeds Feel Housing Lack

By Priscilla Mullins
Senior Staff Writer

Due to the housing shortage at the University, 200 University women are presently living off-campus, according to Helen Snyder, associate dean of Student Affairs.

Included in this figure are 62 seniors who were affected by the temporary change in housing rules announced last spring.

Under the change, senior girls 21 or over who have permission from their parents may live off-campus this year, either with relatives or with other University girls.

Those living off-campus this year include girls in their freshman, sophomore, and junior years, however, due to the fact that the University ran out of housing facilities during the summer as applications arrived, Miss Snyder said.

She said, however, that the greater portion of these girls are living with relatives, and not in apartments as the seniors are doing.

Miss Snyder said that dormitories are "absolutely full at this time," but that as students drop out, some of the girls may be housed there.

There were 13 girls living at Nebraska Center, but six of them have been moved into the dormitories. Miss Snyder said that the hope is that by second semester the waiting for the dormitories will be reduced somewhat.

She said that next year the problem will be remedied with the completion of Abel Hall, new men's dormitory which will house 1,000 students. Another Hall will be vacated by the men, leaving 480 vacancies for the girls to fill in. With the 100 girls' living in Selleck, this would allow for 180 in growth.

With the remedying of the situation, she said, the off-campus living rule will not be in effect next year.

Miss Snyder emphasized the fact that the reason the University does not wish to continue to allow girls to live off-campus is that "We feel we have an obligation to help them get the most out of their education."

"We are interested in the total product we are turning out; that is, we not only want our students to come out of the University scholastically intelligent, but also with the ability to contribute to society and work with people."

"Everyone is rated on jobs after graduation on such factors as this, as well as proficiency on the job. We feel that the student can best gain this side of his education here on the campus where he is not isolated from the University," she said.

Pharmacy Week Open House Held

A National Pharmacy Week open house is scheduled for Sunday and Monday in Lyman Hall. It will be open Sunday from 1 to 8 p.m., and Monday from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Prepared by students in the College of Pharmacy, the open house will include exhibits about the organization of the College of Pharmacy, antibiotics and research.

The history of pharmacy will be explained with the forty reproductions of Robert Thom's "History of Pharmacy."

Apartment Women Enjoying Freedom; Find No Problems With Adjustment

By Barry Abrams
Junior Staff Writer

"Off-campus living is the order of the day." At least that's what the girls who are trying it say.

Under the temporary change in housing rules 62 senior women are living in apartments off-campus this semester. These young women haven't had much trouble in adjusting to the change, however.

Interviews with a few of them revealed some of the advantages and disadvantages of off-campus living.

Sharon Cetak, a social studies major, says, "I'm 22 years old, my parents trust me enough to feel I can take care of myself at my age and I ought to be able to live without all those rules and regulations." Miss Cetak owns her own car and has had no problems in getting to class on time.

Sharon Conway, an English major, says she loves apartment living and it's much cheaper than the dorms. However, it's not entirely different as Sharon received a letter from Helen Snyder, associate dean of Student Affairs that listed the hours and gave the procedure to be followed when checking out.

Tanya Farrans, a speech major, emphatically says "that off-campus living is much, much, much cheaper" than dorm living and that study facilities are as good if not better.

Miss Farrans and her room mates put their food money in a "kitty" and all take turns cooking and washing dishes.

"Living here we learn practical things we can use all our lives; as for dorm living we won't practice it again unless we live in a mental institution or a prison," she said.

Diane Foss, a senior in business administration, likes apartment living very much and says she can live for a month, all expenses included, on the $95 it would cost to live in the dorm.

Off-Campus Students Take Different View

One-third of all University under-graduates live off campus.

These students may be from Lincoln, commute from nearby cities, or may live in apartments in the city. These students see the campus from a different view than do on-campus students.

"I have lived on campus and at home, and I feel that it is better to live on campus. There is more spirit, and I feel closer to the University. At home I feel out of it all," said Tranda Schultz.

Barbara Beckman, a student who also has lived on and off campus said, "I feel freer at the house on campus; more on my own. I feel that I am more qualified for activities. Since I don't have to spend time driving, I have more time to study."

The two students interviewed who had lived on and off campus felt that it was better to live on campus.

Harold Bardy, a freshman whose parents moved to Lincoln from Omaha during the summer said, "I don't feel that I am missing anything by not living on campus. I spend most of my time on campus, and when I have to be somewhere, I can always get there. I am happy living in Lincoln."

Jerry Vogt, a Lincoln man, said, "I enjoy the feeling of being more of an individual by living at home. I have more freedom. There are fewer distractions, and I am not so tempted to play instead of studying."

"I feel close to the campus. I can come here whenever I want, and feel that I am just as much a part of the University as a student who lives here on campus."

Vice Chancellor G. Robert Ross, dean of Student Affairs said that the University education is gained through experiences both in and out of classes.

"It would possibly be better if all students lived on campus, but this is impractical. We have no room for all the students, and many students cannot afford to live on campus. It is better that a student comes to the University and lives off campus, than not come at all."

Any person living in Lancaster County cannot live on the campus first semester, but applications can be taken for second semester if there is room in the residence halls.

-Cards Available-

Lincoln Firms Again Offer Special Student Discounts

By Jim Korshoj
Junior Staff Writer

Firms participating in the student discount card program have been increased from 12 to 16 this year and savings begin next week.

This is the second year of use for the cards and students can save up to 25 per cent by using them. They are sponsored by the Student Welfare Committee of Student Council.

The tickets will be available for the students next week.

When representatives from each living unit purchasing their football tickets in a bloc pick up their tickets at the Coliseum, they will also be given one student discount card for each football ticket they pick up.

Students who do not purchase their football tickets in a bloc will also get their discount cards when they get their tickets.

Those students who do not purchase football tickets will be able to pick up their cards at a special booth in the Student Union. Tickets will also be available in the Student Council office.

Student Welfare Committee chairman John Luckasen reports that the cards were a success in their first year.

"Although three businesses are not returning to the program this year, the nine which are reported satisfaction with it," Luckasen said.

"However," added Luckasen, "in order to have continued success it is up to the students to take advantage of the opportunities this program offers. The more business the students give these businesses, the more likely they will be to return to the program next year."

Also this will encourage more businesses to take part. The Daily Nebraskan contacted those firms not returning to the program this year to find the reasons for their decisions.

Clarke Kent, president of Chicken Delight, gave two main reasons for not taking part this year. His company is using a new type of budget this year which will not allow the use of a discount on sales.

Kent said he also encountered a few problems. He had agreed to give a ten cent discount on all dinners. Several students attempted to make small purchases and then have them declared as being dinners.

"Once, I catered to a dinner of about 50 people. I cut the prices for them to a bare minimum profit in order to satisfy them. Then, when I delivered the meal, I was met by 50 discount cards. I had no choice but to honor them, and then took a loss on the deal."

"However," Kent added, "I believe the discount program is good, and I plan to take part in it again."

Model Cleaners had a different reason for dropping the program.

"When we joined the program last year, we were promised that we would be the only laundry which would be allowed to participate," said Mrs. Polick, wife of Model's owner.

"Then when we were approached to take part this year, they had already signed up another laundry too. We signed up with this point agreed upon, and now they are not following it."

Last year, all the DX stations in Lincoln were in the discount program. This year there are only two.

"We were well pleased by last year's program," reported Earl Kraft, distributor for DX in Lincoln. "This year though we were late in getting organized for the program, we were also contacted a little late by the discount program's committee, and we just couldn't get all the stations organized in time to get them into the program. We do plan to have city-wide participation in future years though."

New businesses taking part in the discount program this year, and their discount offers are:

Whitney's Commercial Wrecker Service — 10 per cent off towing charges and repair parts.
