

—Reverend Speaks Out—

Students Prefer Practical Religion

"College students are more inclined to respond to a church which presents a relevant gospel," according to Dr. Clarence Forsberg, pastor of St. Paul Methodist Church.

"They are looking for preaching that is intellectually respectable and morally pertinent," he said to the charge that college students tend to drift away from the church.

Dr. Forsberg said much preaching is not relevant to our day and "the day of the Sunday orator is over. A

Spanish Club To Hold Election Of Officers

El Circulo Espanol, the University Spanish Club, will hold its first official meeting on Oct. 22 at 7 p.m. in the Student Union's north party room.

Following the election of the officers for the 1964-65 school year, slides of South America and Spain will be shown. Everyone is invited to attend, membership is open to all interested in the club's activities.

preacher must be honest in the pulpit."

Concerning the church's responsibility to the student, Dr. Forsberg said that the student is not different from the ordinary person in this respect.

"He is not exempt from normal responsibilities," Forsberg said of the student. "He is not living in a vacuum in his college world."

"The church does, of course, have the responsibility of constantly confronting him with the moral and ethical ideals," Forsberg said. "He should be reminded of his social responsibilities."

"The minister himself," he said, "has the responsibility of being absolutely honest with the student when he expresses his doubts." "It is the duty of the minister, to support the student, encourage him, and respect him in time of doubt by not trying to overpower him with personal feelings."

"The claim that students are leaving the church is not generally true," according to

Dr. Forsberg. "The student trend merely reflects the trends of the general population."

Dr. Forsberg said the church for the general population is not as dominant a factor in our society as it was before the coming of modern transportation and communication.

He said the church used to be the center of the community socially, politically, and even economically.

"The church doesn't have as loud a voice today," he said.

Forsberg said there is no trend as far as the collapse of the church. "It has to compete with many other institutions which lay claim to people's time."

"In many churches today he said 'there are not only two services on Sunday, but many church activities throughout the week which demand people's time.'"

"In reality," said Dr. Forsberg, "there are more people attending churches today, but the total affiliation figures are down."

Beware Of Mice Seeking Shelter

Almost any home can be the target of mice now trying to enter homes for the fall and winter months, according to Robert Roselle, University extension entomologist. Control of mice in homes is limited to trapping in most cases, he said. The use of poisoned baits should be restricted to out-of-doors. Mice poisoned in the home may result in a lingering unpleasant odor, as they are generally hard to find after they die, he warned. Ordinary mouse traps will usually control mice in the home or garage. The traps can be baited with many kinds of attractive foods. Bacon tied to the trigger is a good bait. Peanut butter, butter, flour, small pieces of bread, and even cheese can be used. Some people have had success with chocolate and gum drops. Use several mouse traps in infested rooms and in the garage or other buildings near the house, Roselle advised.

Project Working, Making Friends With Children At Lincoln Orthopedic

Students interested in working with handicapped children at the Lincoln Orthopedic Hospital may participate in the Orthopedic Project at the University.

"We want someone who is truly interested in forming a friendship relationship with a youngster at the hospital," said Dr. Don Clifton, associate professor of history and principles of education and educational psychology and measurements.

University students go to the hospital, and choose one child to work with. The aim of the project, which has been operating for about ten years, is to form friendships between the student and the child "which have a meaning to both."

Ann Kotouc, who has participated in the project since she was a freshman, said that she feels she has "gained an understanding of how it feels to be a handicapped child and how it feels to be disadvantaged in this way." She has worked with the children in the little boys' ward, who are aged seven to eleven.

"After I meet the child, I talk to him, and find out what he is interested in. I may help him with subjects he studies in school," Miss Kotouc said.

The students meet once a week to discuss mutual problems, and to prepare materials for working with the children.

The project works in cooperation with the social worker and the head nurse at the hospital.

Activities vary depending on the number of counselors. About 20 to 25 interested students usually work with the program.

Clifton said that the University student may decorate the child's bed, and "help the kids fix it up to make it more pleasant." The time is usually spent in visiting, reading, and teaching the children how to play games.

Scrip, Prairie Schooner Offer Opportunities For Neophytes

Editor's note: This is the second in a series of articles on the opportunities for students in departments and activities other than those of their major field of study. This story deals with writing and journalism.

By Jim Korshoj
 Junior Staff Writer

Budding authors at the University are presented several opportunities to see their work in print even though they might not be English or journalism majors.

Two magazines are published at the University which carry student works.

Scrip magazine is published once each semester and contains solely graduate and undergraduate students' works. The magazine has a completely undergraduate staff, and this staff selects all works which appear in the magazine.

Any student may submit his work to the magazine. It publishes poems (preferably lyric), short stories and essays.

Shari Colton, editor of this semester's Scrip, encourages students to submit their work as they have the possibility of receiving a cash reward for it. If a story or poem is judged to be outstanding, the author will receive a cash prize.

Pershing Hosts Johnny Rivers

The Johnny Rivers show will appear in Pershing Auditorium, Thursday from 7-10 p.m. Starring in person will be Johnny Rivers of "Memphis" and "Maybelline" fame. Direct from London, England with their hit "A Summer Song" will be Chad Stuart and Jeremy Clyde. These British vocalists, who rank high on the national hit parade, were recently featured on the Red Skeleton show, and will soon appear on the Jack Parr show.

Appearing also will be Ronnie and the Daytonas with "G.T.O." and special guest stars the Ventures with "Walk Don't Run, 64." Tickets bought in advance at Pershing Auditorium are $1.50, those sold at the door will be $2.00.

Cather Hall To Hold Special SC Election

A special election will be held in Cather Hall tonight to elect that residence's representative to Student Council.

This election was necessitated when Cather's representative for this year did not return to school this fall.

Any junior resident of Cather is eligible to apply for the position if he has a 5.0 grade average.

Voting will take place on each floor of Cather. The ballots will then be collected and taken to a meeting of the presidents of each floor. There the ballots will be counted and the representative will be determined.

mitting work to Scrip should leave his name at the Department of English.

The Prairie Schooner, a national magazine published by the University, also uses student works occasionally.

The English Department encourages student authors by sponsoring several literary contests each year. It gives prizes in poetry competition and in creative and critical writing.

These contests are held at different times throughout the year and students are urged to watch for announcement of them.

The School of Journalism sponsors no open competition in writing, but does publish student works in some of the journalism classes, which are not restricted to journalism majors.

Students interested in newspaper writing and work are eligible to work on the Daily Nebraskan, the University newspaper.

The paper is published four times weekly and all work on it is done by undergraduate students. Most positions on the paper are salaried and these too are open to non-journalism majors. They are filled by interviews held preceding the beginning of each semester.

If interested in gaining first-hand newspaper experience as a newspaperman a student may contact the Daily Nebraskan office in the Student Union.

Journalism experience is also available by working on the Cornhusker, the University yearbook.

Work on the Cornhusker goes on all year and is done by undergraduates. Paid positions are also available on this publication and, again, are not restricted to journalism majors.

Anyone interested in working on the Cornhusker is urged to come to the office in the Student Union.

Unionizing

The Student Union talks and topics committee is sponsoring an all-University convocation in the coliseum at 11:30 a.m. Friday and the speaker is Secretary of the Air Force, Eugene Zuckert. This will be a very informative and educational presentation, don't miss it.

Also on Friday, at 7 and 9 p.m. the weekend film is being presented in the small auditorium of the Union. The film is shown on Sunday also, at 7:30. So, get your student I.D. and 25 cents and come and see "Pal Joey." Good flick, and just a few coins, don't miss this either.

On Saturday, the Touch-down Buffet in the Pan American Room of the Union is a convenient stop before the game, and then plan to stop at the Union again after the game, for the Coffee Hour. Tickets will go on sale sometime this next week for Harry Belefonte, who will appear on Nov. 6. A new and different method is being formulated for the sale of these tickets, and the times and places will be announced soon.

Note to Freshmen: the AWS sponsored sign up mart for activities is this Wednesday, put Union at the top of the list.
