J-School Uses Nebraska As Lab

The University School of Journalism, a growing school with a growing reputation, uses Nebraska as its laboratory, and in the process makes contributions to the state.

The School, which has twice placed first in the William Randolph Hearst Foundation's National Writing Competitions, has a record enrollment of 245 majors this fall, up 36 percent from last autumn.

Gains in program and enrollment forced a move last year to enlarged quarters on the third floor of Nebraska Hall.

Two features of the program that have contributed to the School's national reputation are the summer internships and depth reporting.

Advanced journalism students work throughout the summer and beyond during their junior year. These student interns in advertising, broadcasting and newspaper journalism provide needed manpower to staffs depleted by vacation schedules, according to Dr. William Hall, director of the School.

This past summer 25 of the 30 interns held jobs in Nebraska, and the comments of their employers attest to the program's success. One editor said his intern was "so satisfactory I'd like to keep the person forever."

The depth reporting class, composed of selected seniors in journalism, provides an additional equivalent of an additional news service for the state, Hall said. The class has produced studies of Nebraska's unique unicameral legislature, public power system, and, most recently, a report on Nebraska's beauty.

In addition to the in-depth news article, seniors and faculty members turn their attention to more formal research projects.

The most recent publication was an analysis by Dr. Robert Cranford of the performance of Nebraska's press during the last presidential campaign. Upcoming is a study of the constitutionality of Nebraska's libel law by a 1964 graduate.

In addition to writing, journalism professors regularly speak to press and civic groups. The 8-man faculty, according to Hall, will average 100 speeches a year throughout Nebraska. Most also will serve as volunteer public relations consultants for welfare groups.

To assist professionals in the various areas of journalism, the school normally sponsors one or more workshops each year. This is done at the request of the organizations involved, Hall said. Recent workshops have been held for weekly newspaper editors, industrial magazine editors and broadcast advertising copywriters.

A similar program of assistance has been developed for high school journalists.

The School plays host each fall to the Nebraska High School Press Association and each spring helps with regional clinics.

A statewide competition among high school journalists in May climaxes the program. A new offshoot of the program for high school journalists is the journalism section of the University's All-State High School Course.

Be A Husker Booster—Wear Red

1. What's new in finance?
I think I found a real sleeper.

2. How about letting an old buddy in?
Don't spread it around, but a very dear friend of my Uncle Ed's cousin Jim told him confidentially that he heard from a reliable source that Chippewa & Wabash has made a significant breakthrough in potash.

3. Chippewa & Wabash? They just filed bankruptcy proceedings.
Uncle Ed didn't mention that.

4. What's more, the president of the company is reported to be on his way to Brazil.
How come you know so much about it?

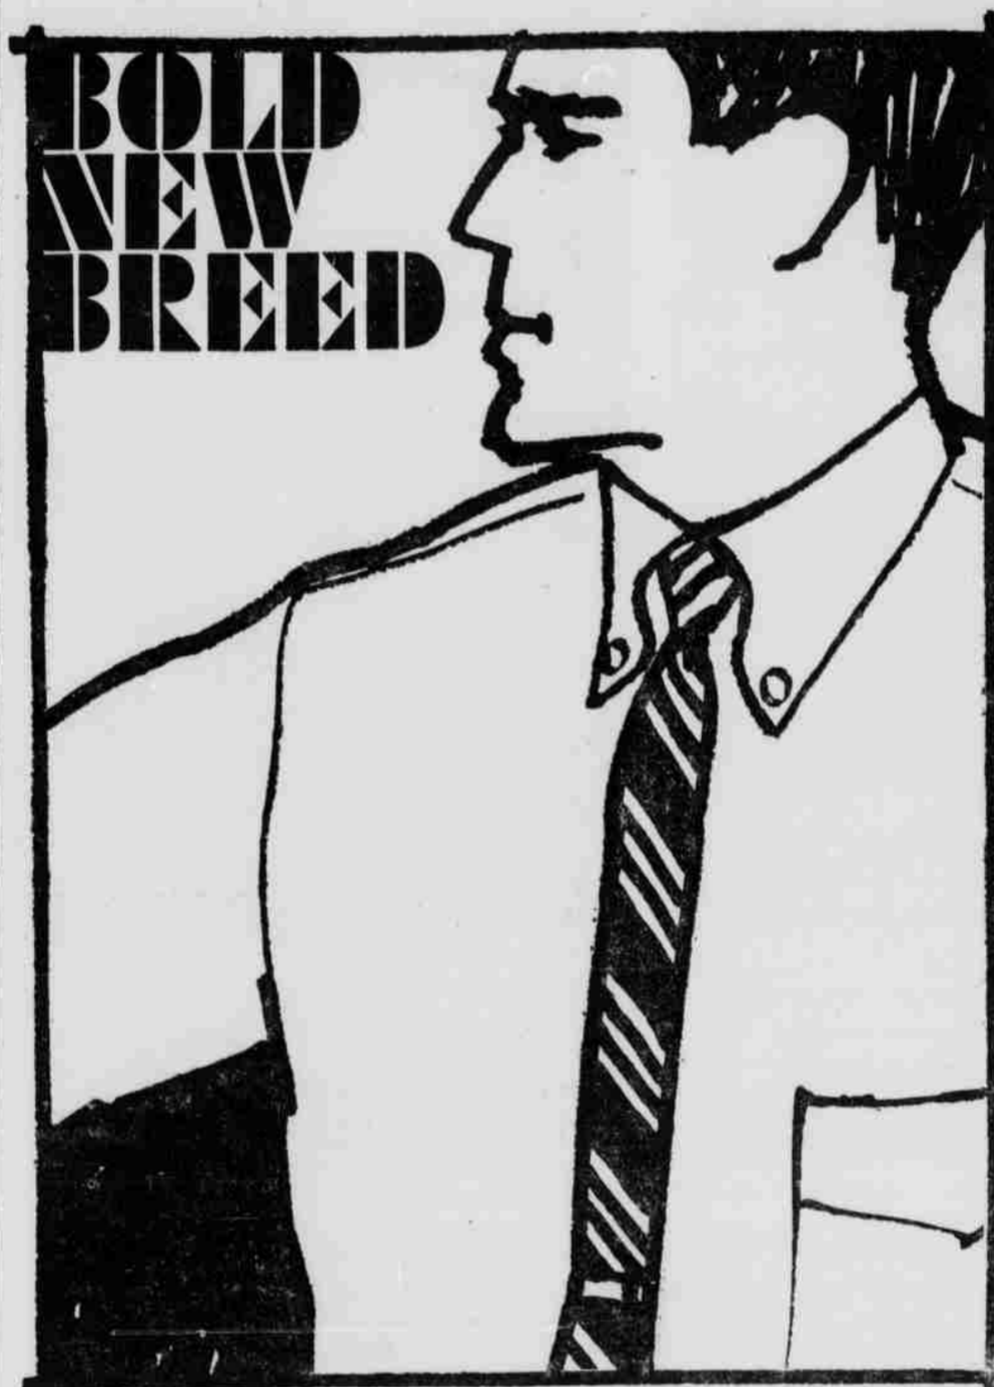

5. Look, if you're going to be a securities analyst you have to dig into a situation and get all the facts.
I thought your field was paleontology.

6. I just signed up for a terrific job in Equitable's Securities Investment Department. With an M.B.A. in finance, a guy can start in as a securities analyst and work up to a top investment management job.
Maybe I should be in paleontology.

Why should you want to be in P&G Sales Management?

- Because...it's a direct route to top management?
- ...it pays well?
- ...it's important, satisfying work?
- ...you can prove your results?

Look at E. J. Hannafin. In 1960, he graduated from Fordham. Today, at the first level of P&G Sales Management, he's controlling a $5,000,000 annual business that makes an important contribution to the economy of his city. He charts his own business course, and guides his people in accomplishing the results. He handles major sales accounts himself. When the sales are in, he can prove his success.

These are just a few of the reasons why each year more and more college graduates seek a career in Sales Management with P&G. And, we need more men every year, because our business expands every year.

Why don't you sign up for a P&G Sales interview, and get the whole story?

PROCTER & GAMBLE
 Sales Management
 Interviewing — Wednesday, October 21.

Successful sales management is based on thorough knowledge of product, market, competition, and many other factors. Analyzing all these aspects of his business is a major part of the P&G sales manager's work.

The P&G Sales Manager contacts directly several major accounts in his area, providing dynamic sales leadership for his organization.
