

Blah!

It lasted 27 minutes, 27 minutes of blah nothingness. It was called a meeting—a meeting, mind you—of the glorious Student Council. It occurred Wednesday, but the same thing occurred the Wednesday before and the Wednesday before that.

The only discussion of any interest was whether or not Coach Devaney's insurance premium had been paid. Only one problem there. This comes under the jurisdiction of the Extra Point Club, an organization that does not come under the ruling thumb of Student Council.

For some reason, the Council has failed to do anything of any consequence all year. There were plans for a racial discrimination study. But something happened to that. It just disappeared.

Perhaps it is the lack of leadership this year. This is not limiting the blame to the officers, but also not excluding them. Student Council, in order to be effective, must be composed of many leaders, persons who are imaginative and creative enough to realize the needs of the campus. They must be able to carry plans to fruition after the needs are seen. It isn't that these persons aren't capable, they just don't have their eyes open.

Another problem of the Council may be the lack of definite lines as to in which areas they may act. What powers do they have to do something about discrimination if they find it? What powers do they have to do something about the drinking issue? What powers do they have over Devaney's insurance?

The Constitutional Convention may do well to consider defining the powers of Student Council in their constitution, to give the new Student Council the power that they need to be effective.

Meetings such as Wednesday's will continue to be the plague of this campus unless the Council knows what their powers are and then has the leadership to utilize these rights.

If they don't, Council will continue to be ineffective, powerless, and good for a few laughs.

if and when

A few sheltered folks have been taking critical pokes at the InterFraternity Council of late. They say that the IFC has become too strong and centralized and that it should be more of a coordinating body.

Alas, that is exactly what the IFC is. Their judicial powers are minimal, and they work for the betterment of the fraternity system as a whole, rather than against the certain fraternity.

Let us suppose there were no strong InterFraternity Council at the University. It would end up with one house battling another with all going down in defeat.

In house-to-house battle the bigger houses would dominate completely. With the system we have now there is only one rush book which eliminates the possibility of the bigger houses throwing so much more snow with a 100-page encyclopedia while the smaller house can't afford to print a line. That's only one example and believe it or not the fraternity system will go down the pipe without the small house.

With a strong, central organization the IFC can continue its expansion plans, tutoring programs and keep moving the FMA to a goal of including all fraternities—all advantageous to the system.

Since the InterFraternity Council is a self-sufficient organization, basically free of administration domination, the group can survey problems common to all fraternities and move to rectify them.

This would, of course, not include fraternity secrecy, but universal programs such as pledge training, rush, scholarship, house maintenance, etc.

By this we can advance the fraternity system and update to the level necessary in these days of increased enrollments, increased educational pressures and increased competition to prove that the fraternity system is the better way to build character, scholarship and morality.

Without it, we (Greeks) will be swept away for lack of progress.

The New Guard

It seems probable that the University of Nebraska will continue to grow in size at least if not also in academic excellence. Plans are now under way for a new Dental College and eventually another Arts and Science College for the East Campus. The East and City Campuses should be united within twenty years with a series of high rise dorms as the connecting link.

There are many variables involved in planning for University development: The City Council must decide if and when the Northeast Diagonal will be built. The Rock Island Railroad must decide whether or not to relocate. Either a lack of vision or a lack of drive on the part of city government has resulted in a slow down of necessary planning and activation of extension of the city campus and the closing of 14th, 16th and 17th Streets to through traffic.

A few years ago the progressive citizens of Lincoln rejected urban renewal as a means in aiding in city planning.

In what can accurately be called one of the most confused and unintelligent campaigns in the history of this city, Dr. R. C. Olney, Eleanor Brown and their well-known group of freedom fighters were able to predict a communist take over in the United States and Lancaster County if urban renewal had been adopted.

Their position, not supported in any way by documentation, seemed to be a prelude to the rise of reactionary hate tactics which compose the activities of the extreme right groups presently attempting to 'warn America.' This is not to say that there are not valid arguments against urban renewal.

The defeat of this proposal has resulted in a hampering of city planning and similarly in University expansion. This view has been expressed often by University officials. It is to be remembered that urban renewal has as its basis the inherent governmental right of eminent domain, tempered by Constitutional protection of due process of law and just compensation.

Last week's issue of Time Magazine featured the rebuilding of the core cities of the East's megapolis. The use of public and private investment coupled with visionary planning aided by urban renewal is resulting in a revitalization of this country's cities: Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Baltimore, Washington and others.

The City of Lincoln is presently at a crossroads in city development. The City Council and Lancaster County Commission have been unable to agree on the location of a city-county building with the result of a separate building for the city being planned for 15th and O at the 'suggestion' of downtown businessmen.

The commissioners recently witnessed the defeat of their separate court house proposal because it was planned for 10th and J separate from that of the proposed city structure.

The State of Nebraska has been faced with an increasing shortage in available and future office space in the State Capitol. The proposal to build a state office building has been circulating for many years with the result that it is still circulating in search of leadership.

The federal government has already planned the construction of a new federal office building and separate post office for the city within the next five years.

The needs of all four governmental divisions have been quite evident for several years. Hemming and having will not erase the ever growing need in the future. What is needed is vision and drive on the part of all four governmental divisions but especially on the part of Lincoln citizens in adopting urban renewal as an adequate tool of the City-County Planning Commission.

Lincoln would do well to take a lesson from Boston in turning the needs of all four levels of government into a Combined Governmental, Civic and Cultural Center for the City of Lincoln.

Such a combined governmental center would place the emphasis on efficiency, beauty and cooperation, lending credence to the slogan that Lincoln is also a center of government besides education.

The Bad Seed III

According to my psychology professor, anxiety can have many sources. Anxiety could be standing in an elevator with an unbathed yak. For an unbathed yak, it could be about anything.

But for my simple purposes, it is taking job interviews and placement tests. Job interviews aren't really pulsating dangers if one knows how to go about them.

First, dress according to the job you want. Wear a slide rule on your belt loop—and also wear that nice plastic belt with NU written on it with beads. Engineering companies will shower you with garlands of theorems and a few sly winks. If you're a speech major, have your cape cleaned three days beforehand and polish your toenails a light green to match your jade cane.

Second, find out the nationality of your interviewer. If he's Italian, Mexican, Peruvian, or Aztec, eat garlic and breathe heavily in his face. When he gets that home look in his eyes, you're in. Mention sour kraut if she has a black, square moustache.

As I said, job interviews are a frolic in the hay compared with job placement tests.

Rate yourself on the following:

- 1. Which would you rather do? Raise funds for AUF, shave your legs, or vacuum the dorm rug?
2. Which is the most appealing? Waxing stable floors, giving pep talks to life-term inmates, or supervising the College of Business Administration?
3. If your father was a Mason, would you date a Jobs Daughter, pledge Phi Delta Theta, or mix mortar boards?

Another thing which makes me nervous, sweaty and ill at ease, is my English class. There are about 15 graduate students who appear to know all that is going on, which is an experience not shared by the other 87 of us.

I highly distrust anyone who sits through a lecture and nods his head. Last week, one of them blew his nose with a page out of e. e. cummings, and I thought I had captured the symbolism until another confided that he used pages from Lord Byron for toilet paper. My anxiety had a field day. I believe it was then that I named it Elmer, just for a way of coping with nervous tension.
