

Tourney Tickets On Sale

Mail orders for tickets to the nineteenth annual Big Eight Conference Pre-Season Basketball Tournament, December 26-29-30, at Kansas City's Municipal Auditorium, will be accepted beginning November 23.

Opening round pairings match Kansas State against Oklahoma and Kansas vs. Iowa State on Saturday, December 26, and Colorado vs. Nebraska and Oklahoma State vs. Missouri on Monday, December 28. Semifinals will be played Tuesday, December 29, and finals Wednesday, December 30.

Spicing this year's tournament will be the return to Kansas City of Coach Henry Iba, the man who guided the U.S. Olympic basketball team to the gold medal at the Tokyo Olympic Games.

Tickets are priced at $1, $2, $3, and $4, with priority in location given to those ordering for all four nights of competition. Checks are to be made payable and sent to the Municipal Auditorium, Kansas City, with either a self-addressed, stamped envelope or 25 cents mailing charges.

Big Eight Conference Sees Tighter Race Every Year

Football, a game measured by the yard, has become a game of mighty few inches in the Big Eight Conference this year, with 14 of the 25 Conference games played to date being settled by one touchdown or less.

A close look at these 14 shows five have been decided by seven points, one by four, three by three, one by two, and three by a mere one point, in addition to last week's 14-14 tie between Missouri and Oklahoma, which puts Oklahoma in the spotlight in this inches-and-few-points survey.

If—a word yards longer than the inches that have settled these 14 games—Oklahoma had scored three more points at critical times this season, the Sooners would be sporting a 5-0 Conference record and would be tied in the loss column with Nebraska—none each—going into this week's game in Norman. Oklahoma lost first to Kansas, 15-14, and then tied with Missouri.

On the other hand, if Kansas had scored four fewer points, it wouldn't have the chance to tie for the title going into the Missouri game this weekend. The Jayhawkers beat Oklahoma and Oklahoma State (14-13) by just one point.

Missouri? Well, 13 more points would have given the Tigers a tie for the top spot going into the last game. Losses came to Nebraska, 9-0, and Oklahoma State, 10-7.

This is just a start around the vicious circle that points out that games in the Big Eight Conference have been tighter than ever before. Carrying this one step further and taking 21 of the 25 Conference games into consideration, the average final score of these games has been 14-14 to 8-0—one touchdown, anybody's game.

Not only has this close series of games been reflected in the standings—Nebraska didn't clinch a piece of the title until last weekend—but it has also been mirrored at the gate, where the three teams that have completed their home seasons—Iowa State, Kansas, and Nebraska—have all come up with record attendance marks.

Iowa State played at home only four times but attracted a crowd of 84,000. Kansas, playing its second season in an expanded stadium, broke its season customer draw for the second straight year, luring 202,000 into its Memorial Stadium.

Perhaps the greatest upsurge came at Nebraska, where the Cornhuskers broke their old six-game standard in just five home appearances with 225,975 fans in their newly-expanded Memorial Stadium.

The Conference as a whole, with five games left, has drawn 1,236,836, just 42 people over 48,000 away from the single-season, total-attendance mark of 1,284,878 set back in 1960.

This record will go this weekend, with sellouts of near capacity crowds expected at all four games, including the Missouri-Kansas and Oklahoma-Nebraska key games. The fans at these two games alone will put the figure well over 1.3 million.

The 1964 Tokyo Olympics are practically ancient history but a pair of comments came to light only this past week.

Billy Mills, now a U.S. Marine, knocked out everybody's eyes when he won the Olympic 10,000 meter run. As a trackman at Kansas several years back he was no better than the usual college distance runner. Billy Mills proved that desire and hard work can bring a fellow a long ways.

Sports Illustrated magazine did a thorough job of covering Mills and his spectacular achievement.

Buried deep in the article was a quote from Mills concerning his college career. "I didn't get along with the coach," he said.

Track coach at Kansas then and now is Bill Easton, who has guided the Jayhawkers to many a track championship, both indoors and outdoors.

But this comment, while personally amusing perhaps, did not strike me as particularly outstanding until I read a press release from the Big Eight Conference Service Bureau.

The quote reads:

"In reviewing the thrilling finish of the 10,000 meter race at the Tokyo Olympics won by Bill Mills, a former pupil of Coach Bill Easton at Kansas, Easton explains: "Coming out of the last curve, Billy reached down in the seat of his pants for the sprint and came from four yards back to win by four in Olympic record time." Coach Easton later admitted that after the race, "I sat down and cried and wasn't ashamed . . . I could have gone home then and been satisfied that I'd seen the Games."

—HUSKER HEADLINER—

Offensive Tackle Kramer Is Consistent Performer

Larry Kramer has been selected as this week's Husker Headliner. Nebraska's fine All-America tackle candidate has been a steady performer all year.

Larry is primarily an offensive specialist, but got some defensive duty Saturday after Walt Barnes was injured.

Kramer is the cause of opposing coaches' nightmares. You know, the kind one gets after watching the movies of the Cornhuskers and hearing the scouting reports.

On successive plays, Kramer can be seen causing havoc in the opposing team's stunting defense, as he clears the kind of hole that Husker backs like to run through.

Kramer is also an outstanding downfield blocker as anyone who saw him take Missouri's Johnny Roland off Ken McCloughan's back on his touchdown run against Mizzou can testify.

Kramer earned this week's award on an accumulation of steady play, rather than on a particularly outstanding show in one game.

Frankie Solich was in for close contention for his second Headliner award with an 83-yard kickoff runback and sixty-nine additional yards rushing.
