CAMPUS OPINION

Within The Law

A policy of the Lincoln Police Department is to tow in cars of those who have a number of delinquent traffic tickets. A new list has just been issued, including over 200 University and Wesleyan students.

A couple of University students have charged the police with awakening them at early morning hours and hauling them to the police station.

While a policy of early arousing is not one to be condoned, the students do not have much right to complain. They are the ones who have violated the law.

There is a tendency within our American society to condemn the protection agencies any time one is caught doing any type of misdeed.

True, a parking ticket is certainly not on the same level with a murder, and true, some murderers have evaded capture by the police forces, but this does not mean that the little misdemeanors can be overlooked. The seemingly insignificant laws are on the books for a reason.

The police cannot ignore these laws or allow violations without punishment. In order to make the laws or the punishment effective, the police must have the power to enforce them, to bring in the violator.

In the case of the parking tickets, the police force may tow in any car at any time if it has delinquent tickets against it. This time, rather than tow it away in the middle of the night, without warning or information as to where the car could be located, the officer contacted the violator and told him the car was going to be towed away and that the only way it could be prevented was for him to pay the tickets immediately.

This may seem unreasonable, but if given till morning to do something about it, the violator may move his car and the officers would again have to track it down.

When a citizen ignores the laws of small consequences, he nourishes a disrespect for the law, not only within himself, but within those who are observing him.

Hats Off

Dear Editor:

I couldn't determine if the letters in Campus Opinion Nov. 23 were meant to be sarcastic or sincere. If they were the former, I believe, after the fabulous football season, there was no cause for such reasoning. As everybody knows by now, we were not expected to do as well as we did.

We lost one game, which meant we no longer had an undefeated season. But look at the tremendous records set by Big Red. Coach Devaney deserves the praise and support of every student and football lover. The Scarlet and Cream also deserve the highest praise for such a terrific season. They are champions in their own right. Hats off to Coach Devaney, one of the nation's greatest coaches, and his fantastic team.

1. Check and mate. How about another game?

I'd like to, Fred, but I have to get set for a job interview.

2. Let's act it out. I'll be the boss. Try and sell me.

Okay.

3. "Good morning, Mr. Fishwick."

"Hi there, Freddie boy, buddy, old pal."

4. "Just give me the facts."

"Well, sir, I took Quine's course in mathematical logic, got a B in Wittgenstein's linguistic analysis, and I'm a bug on 19th-century Flemish painting."

5. "You seem well rounded. What's your major?"

"Musicology, cum laude. But I'm getting my M.A. in experimental psych."

6. "You're just the kind of man we need - a disciplined thinker who can tie a lot of things together and use logic to solve complex business problems. The M.A. helps, too. Systems engineering or operations research work at Equitable is for you."

Say, how'd you know I'm interviewing with Equitable?

For complete information about career opportunities at Equitable, see your Placement Officer, or write to Edward D. McDougal, Manager, Manpower Development Division.
