

Eight More Nominated For Award

Miss Strateman-Miss Skinner-Lydic-Sommerhauser-Larson-Manley-Nelson-Knoll.

JoAnn Strateman, Joan Skinner, John Lydic and Pete Sommerhauser are the latest students to receive nominations for Outstanding Nebraskan.

Additional faculty members who have been nominated are Dr. Robert Larson, Dr. Robert Manley, Dr. Russell Nelson and Dr. Robert Knoll.

Miss Strateman

The letter nominating Miss Strateman emphasized her "notable achievements in the area of scholarship," and her "tremendous contributions to campus organizations."

"JoAnn currently stands first in the senior class with an 8.7 average," the letter said she is a Phi Beta Kappa and a candidate for a Fulbright Grant. She can also read and speak eight languages."

The letter said that Miss Strateman is the first woman to ever hold the office of first vice president of Student Council. "She is largely responsible for the judiciary functions of the Council, including legality of Constitutional Convention proceedings and approval of organization constitutions," the letter said. She is presently serving as secretary of Associated Women Students and on the AWS tribunal in addition to numerous past activities, the letter said.

"A self-effacing, but courageous campus leader, JoAnn has set high standards and achieved them," the letter concluded.

Miss Skinner

"Joan is truly an outstanding Nebraskan, for she has promoted the interests of her state on a local and national level," said the letter nominating Miss Skinner.

Miss Skinner has gained national honor for her work in 4-H the letter said. She has held state and national offices and awards for this work.

"Joan combines scholarship and leadership in activities with a true understanding of people and campus, local and national problems, and is a true friend to anyone who comes in contact with her. She takes on any new and challenging project with tremendous gusto..." the letter said.

The letter pointed out several sorority and campus offices and honors she has held, including present president of Mortar Board. She has also held several scholarships.

"People who have worked with Joan admire her outstanding ability to organize and lead groups, her unequalled loyalty to her campus and her state, and her devotion to the interests of others. She is truly an Outstanding Nebraskan," the letter said.

Lydic

"John Lydic is one of the very few campus leaders who combines with his leadership the personal qualities, self-sacrificing nature and idealism to make him worthy of being called 'outstanding,'" said the letter nominating Lydic.

"John is best known as president of Student Council," the letter said. "In that capacity, John has done his job with the vision which will be a necessity and, hopefully, a trait for his successors."

It is strange that Lydic, the most deserving of this honor, does not seek it or any other recognition for doing what he sees as essential for the renewal of student government, the letter said. "To me and to hundreds of others who are, in the least, acquainted with his achievements, John is as perfect an example of leadership as he is obvious a recipient for the recognition of Outstanding Nebraskan."

Sommerhauser

The letter nominating Pete Sommerhauser cited him as "one of the dynamic leaders of the campus."

Sommerhauser has held numerous fraternity and campus offices the letter pointed out. "Under his chairmanship, the Interfraternity Council for the first time opened up the state to include Independent as well as Greek representatives," it said.

"Another of Pete's outstanding qualities is his ability to work with other people," the letter said. "Tantamount to his work at the University, fulfilling community services has become very important in his life as a student and campus leader." He has worked in Lincoln Project and with the Nebraska Human Resource Research Foundation for several years, the letter pointed out.

"As a result of his past and current activities, scholarship and contributions to the University, it is my honor and privilege to place the name of Pete Sommerhauser in nomination for Outstanding Nebraskan," the letter concluded.

Larson

The letter nominating Larson said he was being nominated "in recognition of his truly outstanding efforts as a professor of chemistry."

"Dr. Larson is first and foremost an excellent teacher," the letter said. "He spares no effort in instructing his students in the many complicated principles of chemistry. His endeavors in instructing are paralleled by his genuine interest in new methods of teaching..."

"In addition to his excellent work in the classroom, Dr.

Larson gives generously of his own free time to help students with individual problems. His ability as a chemist and his deep interest in his students, both graduate and undergraduate, makes him an adviser second to none," the letter said.

Manley

"In nominating Dr. Manley I recognize an outstanding history professor, as well as an outstanding person," the letter nominating Manley said. "Dr. Manley has not only distinguished himself in his field, but also in service to the University and the state of Nebraska, as well."

"Never is he too busy to take time to help a student," the letter said. "He is always willing to lend a hand for assignments or by just talking to the student."

The letter also pointed out that Manley has been appointed as chairman of the 1967 Nebraska Centennial.

"For all his research and interest for his students, the University and the state, no one is more deserving of Outstanding Nebraskan than Dr. Manley," the letter concluded.

Nelson

Although acknowledging the fact that Nelson has been a part of the University for only a short time, his letter of nomination called his contribution to the University "outstanding."

Nelson joined the College of Engineering faculty in 1961 specifically to develop a metallurgy program, the letter said. "After three years of Dr. Nelson's tenure, the number of metallurgical courses offered at the University has grown from four to twelve," it continued. "In addition, he was instrumental in securing approximately 35 thousand dollars worth of new equipment for the University Engineering department."

"Dr. Nelson's many contributions do not end with his work as a professor," the letter said. "He is a dynamic and outstanding man outside the classroom as well. Much of his time is spent working with and for students."

Knoll

"Dr. Knoll's contributions to the University have been many and varied; he has been outstanding in every aspect of the demanding profession of college teaching," said Knoll's letter of nomination.

The letter said Knoll has written five books and has been appointed book review editor of "College English," the professional journal for English teachers.

Knoll has been active in the development of new educational projects for the University the letter said. These include the University's Educational Television program and the Freshman Honors English course.

"Perhaps the finest recommendation for Dr. Knoll and proof of his competence are his overflowing classrooms," the letter said. "Not only a publishing scholar and researcher, he is also a teacher and intellectual whose enthusiasm inspires students to learn and explore."

"His scholarly publications, his creative leadership in the field of education, his concern for students, and his excellence in the classroom make Dr. Robert Knoll highly deserving of the 'Outstanding Nebraskan award,'" the letter said.

Nominations for the Outstanding Nebraskan awards are now closed. Further nominations which were received before the deadline will be published tomorrow.

Already nominated for the award have been Dave Kittams, Peggy King, John Lonnquist and Dr. Robert Johnson.

Winners of the awards will be announced in Friday's Daily Nebraskan, and will be honored at an awards banquet that same day.

Teachers College Budget Allows For Staff Increase

Increases in staff for Teachers College make up the major portion of the College's budget request to the State Legislature, according to Dean Walter Beggs.

Fifteen additional staff members of all kinds, full-time professors, part-time and assistants will be needed to handle increased enrollment during the 1965-67 biennium.

With Bancroft School being vacated in March, much of the College's teaching program will be moved to Clare McPhee School, which was built with the College student teaching program in mind.

Much of the student teaching work which is now done at University High School will be moved to other Lincoln schools, according to Beggs. While most of the teaching is now done at University High, next year the majority of the student teachers will be in different Lincoln schools, he said.

Several new programs for the College are now in the planning stage, Beggs said, and have been included in the budget.

Space is becoming a real problem for the College, he said. About 700 students have been added to the College since 1960, and classroom space is getting cramped. Most of the professional classes are now taught in the Teachers College building and on the fourth floor of the Administration Building.

Beggs said he thought the class day and week would probably have to be extended for the whole University to handle the increased enrollment situation. Full use of the plant will be necessary, he said.

"Over half of our graduate program is conducted at night," he said, stressing the need for more night classes.

Office space is another problem for the College, he said, noting that his staff cannot come in on shifts to share offices.

This is a growing institution, Beggs said, and we are growing with it. "We hope the Legislature will treat our budget kindly."

University Group Adopts SNCC Mississippi Project

The University Friends of SNCC organization voted to "adopt" a Gulfport, Miss., SNCC project.

The project group at Gulfport is running a voter-registration drive, operating a day-school for both voter information and general education and is attempting to establish a community center in the Gulfport Negro community, according to John Else, a University graduate working at Gulfport.

There are presently seven full-time workers in Gulfport, including Else and his wife.

Prior to action by the local SNCC group, the Gulfport project was the only project in Mississippi not supported by some affiliated group in the North.

Another University student, Ken Dollahide, will leave within the next week to join Else's group. Two other students plan to begin working in Gulfport within the next six months.

"Various proposals are now being considered to enable the local unit to provide sustained financial support for the Gulfport effort," Karl Briner, a member of FSNCC, said.

"We feel that concentrating our support on the Gulfport project will make our efforts more effective and will give us a closer identification, both personally and financially, with the problems and accomplishments of the civil rights movement," he said.

A SNCC booth is open in the Union Lounge every day this week from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. to distribute information and accept contributions.
