Football Fans In Iowa Fail To Support Game

A sampling of news from other colleges indicates problems ranging from demonstrations to parking.

The possibility of a future Iowa State and Iowa football game has aroused little support, according to the Daily Iowan. The paper reports that the Board in Control of Athletics was polled with only two votes cast in favor of the proposal. Iowa Gov. Harold Hughes said "I couldn't care one way or the other" whether such a game was played.

The proposal was met editorially by the Iowan with a plan that the financial proceeds from the game be donated to the academic budgets of both schools, thus inspiring the intellectual aspect of college education.

The Daily Californian at Berkeley reported that campus police alleged that between $500 and $600 was stolen during the school year from campus vending machines by people using "slugs."

The war in Viet Nam was the center of a student march in Denver, the Denver University Clarion reports. Two groups took part in the march, one in favor and the other in opposition to United States policy in Southeast Asia.

Parking looms as a big problem at Xavier University in Cincinnati. The Xavier News reports that because of increased construction University officials, faculty and students have 458 parking spaces available to them, which they have to share with the construction workers.

The University of South Carolina Student Senate would add another day to the '65 Thanksgiving vacation. The Gamecock reports that the group has also introduced a "stop week" before final exams. The bill would stop all scholastic and social activity the week preceding exams.

The Daily Kansan reports that 35 students picketing before a speech by U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Douglas was met with a comment from Justice Douglas "I imagine they have the right to picket."

some beforehand experience, hours in the graduate college, and closer counseling.

"There is no emphasis on counting hours, and we are not skipping or shortcutting anything; what we do is prepare the superior student so he is more capable of handling the work of graduate college. We prepare him so he can handle the usual program required."

The specific aspects of the program are to give the student early experience in research, and early experience in the problems of college teaching.

McCashland said, "I hope to see this program expanded. The student's undergraduate and graduate programs are integrated so he can get started earlier in the things that are important."

"We have an enthusiastic support on the part of the staff, and already, in only two years of function, some of the desirable features have been made a part of the regular program."

"About half of the Career Scholars hold Regents, and the average for all is about 7.5," he said.

All of the programs at the University have a philosophy behind them of giving the superior student a chance and encouragement to go beyond what is assigned. The chance for an interflow of ideas between themselves and their teachers promotes and enlivens the whole academic atmosphere of the University as well as being a direct benefit to the students themselves.

Through special sections, special meetings, and closer advising, the superior student at the University is given the chance to go beyond the classroom, to meet and converse with others of his caliber, and excel as fast as his intellectual capacity will allow him.
