Censoring Of Art Prompts Special Review Committee

Controversy over the censorship of Ward Douglas Schumaker's entry in the "Governor's Invitational Art Show" has stimulated the creation of a special study committee.

Schumaker, a senior art student at the University of Omaha, was recently selected as winner of the show sponsored by the Crossroads Shopping Center. However, after conferring with Gov. Morrison the officials of the Crossroads Merchants Association decided the painting was not appropriate to be hung in the governor's mansion.

First prize was then awarded to Fred Sommers, also a student at the University of Omaha.

This action stimulated the planning of a march in protest by University of Nebraska art students Mar. 17. The march was planned because the students felt that an "ethical contract" had been broken by the censorship from the merchants association.

The Nebraska Arts Council now plans to set up a committee to review the controversy.

Dr. James Shaeffer of Grand Island, council chairman, said the committee information will help establish policies. He said Gov. Morrison participated in a council board meeting here at which the decision was made.

The Nebraska Arts Council is a private, non-profit corporation sponsored by the governor.

Lose Your Head Lately? Try Lost And Found Dept.

By Priscilla Mullins
 Senior Staff Writer

Twenty-one persons at the University won't be able to see the Easter bunny hopping down his famed trail unless they hop over to the Lost and Found Department at Nebraska Hall and pick up their glasses.

Since September of this school year, 20 pairs of prescription glasses have been left at various places around the campus and have wound up at the Lost and Found Department. There is also a set of contact lenses in a blue and white carrying case.

Those 21 people must not "see" the importance of picking up their lost glasses.

Class rings, of course, aren't the cheapest things in the world to buy, but there are 29 of them on a ring in the Lost and Found Department.

Among the various rings, three were turned in just last week, according to John Dzerk, operational manager for the University, and "caretaker" for all the lost items.

One ring is from Gering, class of 1961, with the initials DR. Another is from Morrill, class of 1964, with the initials RK. The third is from a high school with the initial E, class of 1961, with the initials A.R.

Two Lincoln students are missing their class rings, too. A 1963 graduate of Pius X High School with the initials MJD is missing a ring, as is a 1962 graduate of Lincoln High School with the initials EM.

Dzerk said the department has collected about 200 text books since September, and "hundreds" of loose leaf and spiral notebooks.

Rings and rings of keys adorn an almost ceiling-high shelf in the lost room. Boxes and boxes of lost gloves, singles and pairs line the walls in the room. Dzerk estimated that there are about 100 pairs and 200 singles.

In the clothing line, there is almost anything one might imagine—tennis, snow boots, shirts, a pair of size 30 trousers, jackets, all-weather coats, hats, scarves . . .

There is a planter with the words "Holly" by Jody O'Neill on the bottom, which Dzerk said Jody might want back.

If anyone has lost a broken-down toaster, it may be picked up at the department.

An executive brief case belonging to George Mark Jones has been in the department for three months, although Dzerk said Jones was contacted about the case.

A notebook containing an hour exam with an "8" on it may be picked up by Ted James, a senior, who seems to be doing very well in Spanish 151.

Marie Bredaks may have trouble finding or calling her friends without her address and phone book.

In the check book line, two stacks of lost books are available to their owners, if they care to pick them up. Among those who have trouble hanging on to their "money books" are Jon Jones and John Jones. Howard Metcalfe seems to be having double trouble, with two separate check books in the department.

Someone may be in trouble trying to run their car without a carburetor filter. Three other cars are missing one hub cap each.

What happens to lost articles which are not claimed after a year or two?

Dzerk said that the glasses are sent to Eyes for the Needy, an organization in New Jersey. Some of the glasses are sent back to Nebraska, he said. Last year about 75-80 pairs of glasses were disposed of in this way.

Text books, unclaimed after a year are sent to the University Book Store, where they are disposed of or put back on the shelf and sold as used books.

Unclaimed clothing is taken by Mrs. Roper of the Lincoln Police Department and distributed to needy persons. Spiral notebooks are also taken by Mrs. Roper.

Since September of this year, six pages of a three ring spiral have been filled with signatures of persons picking up their lost items. But there is still so much more to be picked up . . .

Those who feel the urge to pick up some of their lost items should enter Nebraska Hall from the 16th Street side, go up about three steps, and turn to the left to find the Lost and Found Department.
