History Scholar To Lecture Here

A world-famed scholar in Renaissance history will speak on "The Constitution and Spirit of the Florentine Republic Before the Medici," tomorrow at 11 a.m. at the Nebraska Center.

Professor Hans Baron will lecture for interested students and faculty members in connection with the Central Renaissance Conference.

Baron's lecture will be a presentation of the results of his latest research, new and unpublished, rather than a summary or rehash of material already in print.

A Research Fellow at the Newberry Library in Chicago, Baron has chosen to concentrate upon major questions and problems, in preference to peripheral or secondary themes.

Baron was born in Berlin and received his Ph.D. there. He taught at the University of Berlin, at Queens College and other institutions.

He has received numerous academic honors, and has had articles and books published on Renaissance topics.

Jokers Attempt Sorority Coups

Several sorority houses have been pestered the past two weeks with fire crackers and pellet guns, according to campus police captain Eugene Masters.

"We've had five or six reports from sororities," Masters said. "One or two of these seem to have been pellet guns, while the rest were fire crackers."

In one instance, the fire crackers were being thrown from a nearby fraternity house, Masters said.

"I've talked with the house president about this," he said

I-State Coeds Face Punishment If Guilty Of 'Drunken Writing'

—Skirting Other Campuses—

An Iowa State dormitory council wants any coed too intoxicated to sign in on her own to appear before the council, reports the Iowa State Daily.

The recommendation is a "white sheet" ruling that a coed must sign in in person, said Jerrie Mahobey, president of Oak Hall. The "white sheet" contains University regulations for residence hall women.

Possible action against violators of the rule, if passed, could include early hours or camping. The rule is not based on a "moral judgment," Miss Mahobey said.

Future Senators Can Still File

Applications for candidates in this year's Associated Students of the University of Nebraska Student Senate elections have been available since April 1 in the Student Affairs Office of the Administration Building.

The applications may be filed today through April 13.

To be eligible according to the new constitution, an applicant must be a regularly enrolled member of the college he proposes to represent and must agree in writing to resign if he should terminate his enrollment in that college during the term of office for which he seeks election.

Also, applicants must be full-time undergraduate or graduate students.

The applicant must "meet University regulations for participation in extra-curricular activities."

Each candidate must be photographed. The photograph and filing information will be publicized in a manner specified by the Student Council.

but was recommended "to keep order in the house."

The recommendation reads: "Any girl who is unable to walk from the front door to the desk, sign in under her own power, and walk unassisted to the double doors on the first floor at the request of the assistant housemother or housemother, will be subject to appear before Oak's house Council."

From the Oklahoma Daily, University of Oklahoma, Norman:

OU's senior class has established a new program that may turn out to be one of the best "class gifts" yet... not sweatshirt or senior week-ends, but an administrative internship system.

Seventeen students were named to work for eight weeks with administrative officials in the activities of their offices. Not only will this be good training for these students, but it will facilitate communication between students and administration.

The program, which will just get a toe-hold this spring, shows potential. We hope it will be given several years to prove itself.

Living as a mascot in a fraternity house would be enough to drive any dog to law-breaking, says the Kansas State Collegian.

Such is the case of Brandy, one of six mascots living in fraternities at K-State.

Brandy is on $50 bond. He got in trouble with the police for violating the city leash law and now is sticking a little closer to home. The Delta Tau Delta house.

Brandy is a 190-pound St. Bernard and is reportedly still growing. The Deltas had him for two years.
