

A & S Senate Candidates . . .

problems such as beautification and lighting shouldn't be neglected along with the other problems of parking, discrimination and the new constitution.

Lynn Grosscup, freshman, put campus beautification and finding more effective plans to solve the litter condition on campus and parking high on her list of things she would like to accomplish as a student senator.

The new constitution itself and putting the new government into operation was listed by many candidates as principle things that will need a lot of work next year.

Kelley Baker, sophomore, said, "One of the first things the ASUN must do is incorporate so that the government will be able to expand operations and so that the students will have limited liability."

"It's going to take a hell of a lot of work to get the new government working and I think this is going to be the main issue next year," said Gary Larsen, sophomore.

Tanya Bloomgren, freshman, said that the new government's first problem was going to be getting adjusted to the new system.

George Lonnquist, freshman, said he felt the student government was going to be strong enough next year that it could act as a "guiding light" in helping the other organizations on campus.

Joe Carroll, junior, also said that he felt the new government could take a more active role in helping individual clubs and living units with problems.

"There is no reason," he said, "why student government couldn't help with such things as the telephone situation at Burr Hall and individual fraternities when they want to develop something such as Derby Day."

Liz Aitken, freshman, listed several things that she felt should be done by the new government.

"Student Association must take a step in initiating a stronger committee or organ to deal with the campus housing problem, we must back any group who wants to bring a controversial speaker to the campus, and such things as the student discount cards have to be completely changed and improved," she said.

"Student Senate this year and in the years to come will be faced with more difficult issues than ever before," said Jim Kinyoun, sophomore. "Issues such as the campus parking situation, the Senator's program and many other problems will need a lot of work."

Kinyoun suggested that the Senator's Program should be better co-ordinated between the senators and the university.

John McClymont, sophomore, said that among other things she thought the new Student Association should join one of the national student council organizations.

"One place student government has really fallen down in the past," he said, "is in communicating with both the faculty and students. If I'm re-elected I'll do everything I can to change this situation."

Dan Durling, sophomore, said that he felt the new government should consider changing the voting procedure from colleges to living units. He said the representation as it is now really isn't fair.

Durling also pointed out that some type of joint committee was needed between the faculty and the senate to work out specific problems.

"The Student Orientation Program," said Bruce Jensen, freshman, "should be expanded so that freshmen students will understand exactly what is expected in each class and organization available to him."

He also pointed out that next year would be an extremely important time of growth and development for the students and school.

Lynn Overholst, freshman, said that she felt the new government was going to be strong enough to meet many of the present problems on campus. She listed the important problems as being civil rights, parking, communications and putting the new government into operation.

John Drodow, freshman, said that he thought the main problem next year was going to be trying to set up effective procedures for the new government. He suggested that maybe issues could be kept on the floor longer so that the representatives knew more about what they were talking about.

Drodow also said some type of Code of Conduct should be established for individuals in the government.

John Peak, John Dzerk and John Miller could not be reached for comment. If they can be contacted by tomorrow they will have comments in tomorrow's paper.
