Theatre To Present Three Plays Tonight

The University Laboratory Theatre will present three plays tonight and tomorrow night, beginning at 7:30 in 201 Temple Building. The plays to be presented are "Gallows Humor," "Gammer Gurton's Needle," and Bernard Shaw's "A Glimpse of Reality." Admission is free. "Gammer Gurton's Needle" is one of the earliest examples of native English comedy. The bawdy farce was written in 1563 and is credited to "Mr. S. Master of Art." The mysterious Mr. S. is considered by most theatre historians to be William Stevenson. The play was first produced in 1573 at Christ College, Cambridge. The play's director, Linda Schlechte, describes the play as a "raucous farce written in rhyme, whose comic spirit is as fresh as when it was first written. The play should prove interesting to all students, especially those of English dramatic literature and its history."

In addition to the three plays scheduled for tonight and tomorrow night, the Experimental Theatre will present John Byron O'Blake's original script "Motivations." O'Blake's play begins at 8 p.m. in the Arena Theatre this Saturday and Sunday nights.

Park Indian Watches Rag-Husker Stalemate

The annual Rag-Cornhusker football fiasco convened last Friday under the stoney stares of the Pioneer Park Indian. The gopher hole-studded field witnessed the rather inconclusive scoreless tie, as the heavily favored Rag staff proved unable to move the ball. In spite of the fact that the Cornhusker staff suffered the same fate, several bystanders remarked that the Husker team was the most offensive they had seen in years.

In addition to "Sholess" Schuman's defensive ability, much of the game's excitement was contained in a long but illegal pass to "Dapper Dan" DeMars in the lone Husker threat.

Members of both teams showed outstanding sportsmanship by the issuance of reciprocal cheers and by unanimously voting to change the rules from touch to tap.
