Ten new nominations for the Outstanding Nebraskan award have been received. The nominations include Dr. Lawrence Crowe, Mrs. Dorcas Cavett, Dr. Robert Manley, John Lonnquist, John Klein, Betsy Nore, James Levy, Glenn Korff, Duane Francis and Peggy King.

This brings the total nominations to sixteen. Previously nominated were Dr. Roberto Esquenazi-Mayo, Dr. Neale Copple, Jim DeMars, JoAnne Strateman, Suzi Walburn and Joan Skinner. The award will be presented to one student and one professor at a luncheon this Friday.

Lonnquist

In three letters nominating John Lonnquist, all three writers stressed Lonnquist's service and sacrifice for his friends, his school, his fraternity, campus organizations and his church.

"Always he enjoyed helping and more often than not he did far more than he was asked," one writer said.

Another writer said that Lonnquist "should be given this award not because of his impressive scholastic and activity record, but because he is THE outstanding Nebraskan on this campus."

The letter said that Lonnquist "is well known as the past president of the Innocents Society, past president of his fraternity, past president of A.U.F., past senior advisor for Phi Eta Sigma, etc., but to those who know John, he is much more.

"John is the one whose dynamic enthusiasm permeates everything he touches," the letter said.

"He is the one who accepts responsibility and challenge readily, the one who is not afraid to do the small task, the one who gives credit where credit is due. John's friendly smile adds incentive to all those who associate with him."

The letter said that a "most unique facet concerning John's whole record is the diversity of his talents: scholarship, activities, intramurals, fraternity, church.

"John exemplifies all of those qualities that make a person truly outstanding," the letter said.

The letter concluded that Lonnquist "the logical choice, if the Outstanding Nebraskan Award is to be awarded, as the name implies, to THE outstanding Nebraskan."

Klein

The letter nominating John Klein said he "deserves the honor of being named Outstanding Nebraskan because he has taken a specific interest in this University,—has discovered its needs and potentials. While being a regular part of the institution, as a student, he also has deliberately and conscientiously set out to create a permanent improvement therein."

According to the letter, Klein has received an upper-class scholarship and several other financial grants, and currently carries a 7.4 average in the Graduate College.

While at the University he has been vice president and president of his house, has served on RAM Council and the RAM Judiciary Committee, and has served as a representative from the Graduate College to Student Council and to the Constitutional Convention, the letter said.

At present, he is a member of the Dean's Committee on Racial Discrimination and is an Associate Justice of the Student Court under the new Constitution. He has been a Student Assistant in Cather Hall for the past two years, according to the letter.

In the letter, the writer said Klein "deserves this award as public recognition for the intelligent and comprehensive part he has taken in the mainstream of advance at the University."

He "always makes up his own mind after careful consideration of all the evidence, and impartially does what he thinks is best for the long-range, overall good of the student body," the letter said.

Klein "has devised a and worked forcefully for a permanent, significant contribution to the University—in form, the new Constitution and its concept of government."

The letter concluded that Klein has measured up to the scale of success, "becoming, through his lasting contribution of a new Constitution, an Outstanding Nebraskan."

Miss Nore

In the letter of nomination for Betsy Nore, the writer praised her "sincere interest in others."

"Her concern for the rights and feelings of her fellow man led to active participation in the University charity organization, All University Fund. People to People and work as a dorm counselor gave her the opportunity for further contact with University students," according to the letter.

The writer said that "a solid example of her good will toward others is the lasting friendship she initiated with a French family through the People to People Brother-Sister Program. Such contact is a small but vital agent in promoting better understanding between ethnic groups."

The letter concluded that "with a proper balance between academic endeavors and outside activities and with conduct proceeding from good will, she has set a fine example for fellow students and is worthy of consideration for the Outstanding Nebraskan Award."

Levy

The letter nominating Jim Levy said "he has proven himself worthy of this honor because of his participation in the furthering of student activities on campus with the effect of improving the student body and the University community as a whole."

According to the letter, Levy has served as past president and vice president of his fraternity. "Through his efforts as an active member of the Interfraternity Council, he was chosen to Gamma Gamma, a Greek honorary."

Levy "presented the initial idea and helped to organize the 'Get-Out and Vote' campaign concerning the national election last fall."

"Jim also furthered the Jewish concern not only on campus but also in the Lincoln community by helping to re-establish the Sigma Delta Tau sorority and also by helping to initiate the advancement of the Hillel Foundation on campus," according to the letter.

The letter concluded that "through these activities and his scholastic attitude, Jim has definitely been an asset to the University and a strong supporter of its ideals and goals."

Korff

According to the letter of nomination for Glenn Korff, he "has asserted positive leadership in his activities and has shown great interest in the welfare of the University."

Korff was elected as president of his house in his sophomore year, according to the letter, and "learned to accept a great deal of responsibility long before most of his classmates."

He has served as a representative to the Interfraternity Council and the Student Council, the letter said. He has also been a member of Kosmet Klub.

"In spite of his many extra-curricular accomplishments, Glenn has also excelled in academic life and has been chosen as a member of both Phi Lambda Upsilon chemistry honorary, and Theta Nu, pre-medical honorary," according to the letter. He served as vice president of Theta Nu and was a finalist for the IFC sophomore scholarship.

The letter said that "in recognition of his outstanding work in all areas of campus life, Glenn was tackled as a member of Innocents Society last spring."

"It is apparent then," the letter concluded, "that Glenn Korff has served his University unselfishly, assuming responsibility and leadership whenever needed."

Francis

The letter of nomination for Dwaine Francis said that he "has contributed a great deal to his college and to engineering on campus."

Francis has been business manager of Blue Print and treasurer of this magazine, has been on the Engineering Publications Board for two years and on the engineering magazine, according to the letter. He was co-chairman of Program, an engineering magazine, and held "numerous house offices" in his fraternity.

"Dwaine has helped to give engineering activities on the University campus an important place and has probably contributed more in this way than any other person."

The writer said that "this year's Cornhusker would never have been completed without his patient guidance, level headedness and hard work as the book's editor-in-chief. He took this job "as a fifth-year student with no other purpose in mind than completing one of the best yearbooks in the school's history."

Miss King

The letter nominating Peggy King said that "she serves well as an ideal student. The breadth of her interests is not betrayed by shallowness in any one of them.

"Peggy is never so certain of her cause that she compromises her own standards in obtaining her purpose," the letter said.

"She succeeds in what she does by participating tirelessly and generously and never by losing sight of the ultimate problem.

"As a worker," the letter said, "Peggy is invaluable; as a person, she is understanding and patient. As a student, she is outstanding because she so consistently seeks the truth by searching for the right questions."

Crowe

The letter nominating Dr. Lawrence Crowe said that he is a professor in Dairy

Science, who has been at the University for 41 years, and whose "concern for student well-being has been expressed through the accomplishments which he has made as chairman of the Ag College Scholarship, Student Affairs, Loans and curriculum, junior division advisory board and student summer employment committees."

The letter said that

MB's Seek Aid For Book Drive

What does Ataturk University in Turkey need from you? Books, according to the University's Mortar Boards, and they're helping to collect books of all kinds for the Ataturk library.

Collection boxes are placed in the faculty coffee rooms of all major buildings on both City and East Campuses, and Mortar Boards will be collecting books from faculty members during the two weeks before the final examination period.

According to Harold Allen, Chief Advisor of the United States Operations Mission in Turkey, "the Ataturk University library has a pressing need for text and reference books covering a broad range of subjects, including (but not limited to) all the agricultural sciences, physical sciences and social sciences including economics.

"In addition," Allen said, "books dealing with literature and the arts would be most welcome, along with fiction, particularly the not-so-difficult-to-read type.

"A high percentage of the Turkish staff at Ataturk University, and many of the students, are quite proficient in English, and their interests are broad," he said.

Nebraska University has exchanged instructors with Ataturk since 1955. The University is located 60 miles away from the nearest library, and so the students must rely on their university's facilities.

Donors should attach a slip of paper with their name and department (if faculty), and the book will be donated in their name.

"Our enrollment in art has doubled since the early 50's to about 200 including 15 graduate students. Improved facilities for the art department have had an effect on the increased interest in this area," Laging said.
