

'Post Office Kissing' Can Be Dangerous

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article was written in 1938 under the Federal Writers' Project. The project was created during the depression to keep more persons doing work, rather than going in the relief lines. Articles such as this were sent to editors around the state to use in their publications.

Nebraska newspapers, incidents of a kind which probably had much to do with the game's decline in favor.

A Beatrice young man, for instance, claimed that he was enticed into a game of Post Office on evening in 1894, with the result that he went about for several days afterwards with his lips so sore he could hardly talk or eat. This would seem to be legitimate cause for complaint, since nearly everyone likes to talk and few care to go without eating. Even worse, however, was the sad case of the young fellow whose carefully tended mustache was his greatest pride. He, too, got into a kissing party one night, and after a thrilling session found his mustache so full of chewing gum that he had to cut it off.
