Don't Miss 'Collector'

By Diaper Sandoe
"The Collector" is an outstanding motion picture. Terence Stamp and Samantha Eggar who portray the collector and the collected respectively have been widely acclaimed for portrayals, and deservedly so. The pair raise this picture from what could be just another "horror" movie to a moving, changing relationship between a beautiful young art student and a psychotic bank teller who suddenly came into a fortune when he won a football pool.

William Wyler directed this picture, and should be given a lion's share of the credit for its success. Miss Eggar is a novice in the acting profession compared to Stamp, but oddly enough it is she who provides the greatest source of psychological interest as she develops logically and fascinatingly throughout her imprisonment.

Stamp, as the obvious psychotic, does a superb job within the curiously restrictive confines of his role, and perhaps it is director Wyler who doesn't allow Stamp full reign. The bulk of Stamp's psychological change is saved for the last 90 seconds of the motion picture in what is supposed to be a twist ending. The ending, however, smacks of commercialism, and is the only distasteful part of a picture which otherwise is handled with great taste.

This flaw in the picture, if indeed it is that serious a flaw, does not dim the light of an otherwise thrilling, macabre and tender motion picture. This one is not to be missed.

CAMPUS OPINION

Impotent Or No

Dear Madam Editor:
The Young Republicans of the University of Nebraska are hardly cognizant of the fact that their organization or the state organization has become "impotent". We fully recognize and admit the losses in last November's elections. (What else can we do!) But we also deny the accusation that these losses can be attributed to work of the Young Democrats. As a matter of fact, we are still breathlessly awaiting the first meeting of this organization, in order that we may have a look at the body which made such an "important contribution" in the last election. If the YD's wish to stun us with a magnificent show of power, they had best assemble first.

We would like to express our gratitude to Mr. Elm for his recognition of Governor Peterson as the "proven winner" he is. But we would also like to remind him that it has always been the policy of our club to refrain from the endorsement of any candidate before the primary elections. We do welcome Governor Peterson's reappearance in the Nebraska political scene. It will be an election to be long remembered.

Sincerely,
Merry Ballard

Fox's Facts

By Gale Pokorny

The last home football game raised some doubt, in what I laughingly call my mind, about the real reason that I laid out ten hard-earned bucks for a season football ticket.

As that refreshingly cold rain dripped down my neck, certain ominous questions began to appear on the screen in my head. Questions like, "What am I doing here?", "Is this really worth it?", "What's a good cure for double pneumonia?" and finally, "How far does school spirit go anyway?"

I mean, let's face it, was there really any question as to who was going to win the first game? As I listen to my fellow students quibble about such issues, I find that the real question did not concern which side would reap the victory but rather, "How much will Big Red win by?"

So it was not with a heavy heart, that day that proved so fatal to the Frogs or Toads or whatever they were, that I turned my attention away from that slaughter on the grass and started looking elsewhere in the stadium for intellectual satisfaction.

After a while, I found what I was looking for. Human beings. Some of them anyway; after watching a couple of them, I wasn't quite sure just what to label them. But there were a lot of them, over 50,000 to be nowhere near exact.

There were so many different varieties that they defy classification, however I will endeavor to describe a few to you at this time. Some of which I hope you will recognize.

First of all, the slightest hint of foul weather brings out a Nebraska University original. No other campus has even seen this type of rain apparel if I may call it apparel. Umbrellas.

I'm positive that the whole thing will spread like wild fire among all the "in" schools and once again Nebraska will assume its rightful place in the collegiate fashion world.

The majority of these umbrellas inevitably wind up thrust into eyes or piercing someone's back like a skewer all ready for the fire. A stimulating experience awaits those who juggle six cokes and four hot dogs, about a hundred yards back to their seat only to sit down on a razor sharp umbrella casually left leaning across the bench.

Second we have the "Coach Devaney for a Day" type. These people are easily picked out by their conversations with "assistant coaches". Phrases like, "What Bob should have done there..." and "Last time I talked to Tippy..." quickly pinpoints this guy as the one who will shortly turn around and ask you how many points a team gets for a touchdown. Treat him kindly, the profession needs everyone they can get these days.

Then there are those insecure people in the world who deem it necessary to reassert their presence here by periodically jumping up and shouting. Phrases such as, "Yea," "Go," and "We want blood" are quite common. There is nothing wrong with shouting, in fact some of my best friends do it. But please tell me why, when a couple of two hundred and fifty pound mature young men in full battle garb walk out into the middle of a large field, throw a coin into the air and MANAGE TO CATCH IT, ten thousand people stand up and cheer.

But then when the game lapses into a one-sided running contest and the stretcher bearers go on strike, one always has this branch of humanity to save a dull Saturday afternoon from a complete loss.

CAMPUS OPINION

Never A Hurrah

Dear Editor:

You asked for it. It seems to me that the so-called leaders of the Daily Nebraskan are too often hindering the workings of ASUN. I'm sure we are all for freedom of the press and constructive criticism but for the last two years I have seldom heard a hurrah for the Student Council. In fact, about all I've heard from the Nebraskan in two years is about the Student Council or ASUN. If you people want ASUN to fail go right ahead with your yelling. Can't you just report what this organization is doing and keep the snide remarks out of it.

May I ask what you think the organizations on this campus would do without the students who are willing to beat their brains out for them? They would die and then what would all the self-righteous followers do on weekends without the films, concerts, and plays to go to.

It gets a little tiring hearing people called "pushers" and "so-called leaders" just because they are the type of person who enjoys organizing and the fulfillment that goes along with it.

So, I suggest you try to report comprehensively over there instead of constantly finding fault with people who already know they are not perfect.

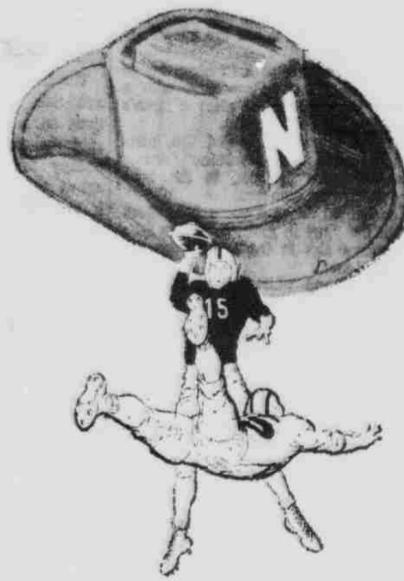

Sincerely,
Susan Baade
