

Theatre Season To Open Friday

By Bruce Giles
Junior Staff Writer

"Over the top" may describe the battle scenes of Macbeth in the final week of rehearsals.

"Some people got bonked when they shouldn't have been bonked," said Rich Malsby, publicity director for the University Theatre.

Sets for Macbeth, which opens the University Theatre 1965-66 season in repertory Friday night, are finished, and the play is in the final stages of technical rehearsal, Malsby said.

Macbeth will alternate with Edward Albee's controversial play, "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf," throughout the first semester with eight performances of each play.

Sets for both Macbeth and "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf" were designed and built by Charles Howard, technical director for the University Theatre.

Directing the Shakespearean tragedy will be Stephen Cole, assistant professor of speech and dramatic art.

Jerry Mayer will appear as Macbeth. Playing opposite Mayer as Lady Macbeth will be a University Theatre newcomer, Janet Jensen.

The first weekend of Macbeth is a sellout but there are still good seats left for the other performances, Malsby reported.

He said that excellent seats are still available for "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf."

The play, which has been the subject of much controversy in the last three years, received the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award, the ANTA Award, the Outer Circle Award, the Foreign Press Association Award, the annual Variety Poll and five Tony awards during its first season on Broadway in 1962.

Panhellenic Sets Grade For Initiation

By Diane Lindquist
Junior Staff Writer

A 2.0 grade average was set as a sorority initiation requirement by Panhellenic members Monday.

The action resulted from the feeling brought forth at the scholarship workshop that pledges should have a clear and definite goal.

The problem of interference by boys when rushees enter and leave rush week parties was discussed, and it was decided that Panhellenic would talk to the Interfraternity Council and try to find a solution.

Motions were passed to include the date of activities and honors listed in rush books and to outlaw congratulatory notes sent to high school girls by sororities.

Reports of the Panhellenic workshops indicated discussion of who should live in the sorority house as a result of the increased enrollment. Suggestions were offered at the workshops.

Trophy stealing was discussed, with the suggestion that boys should let the sororities know they took a trophy and that only trophies be taken.

It was pointed out that the 60 mile radius limit for pledge sneaks had been abandoned, but there is a 30 hour time limit.

SDS Statment Back, Anti-Draft Movement

By Wayne Kreuscher

The national organization of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) in Chicago has issued a statement recommending that young people apply for conscientious objection if they have anti-war sentiments.

This statement which was mailed to the Daily Nebraskan Monday affirms that the national chapter of SDS is presently behind a concerted effort to advise young men being drafted of the legal means of resisting conscription.

Larry Clawson, former vice president of the University chapter of SDS, resigned his membership and office in the group Sunday night because he said the national SDS organization had failed to roll the more than 100 college SDS chapters on this issue of conscientious objectors.

Carl Davidson, president of SDS on the University campus said Tuesday that Clawson was mistaken. He said that the national organization of SDS had polled its chapters, but that it hadn't contacted the Nebraska chapter because it has not been recognized by a national convention of SDS chapters.

Davidson said that the Nebraska chapter would be classified as a new chapter without voting privileges until the national SDS convention in Chicago this January.

Davidson, who is a graduate student and instructor in philosophy from Aliquippa, Pa., said that he himself is presently registered with his draft board as 2-S, but that his draft board has statements from him describing him as a conscientious objector.

He said he didn't want to request a new classification until a later date, but that he has photos of himself leading peace demonstrations and check blanks showing the money he has contributed to peace organizations.

The University SDS president said that he couldn't be sure what action the University chapter would take in encouraging conscientious objectors until the members of the University group voted. He said they didn't necessarily have to back the national organization's views.

Davidson does have a number of pamphlets called "G.I. or C.O.?" which explain each youth's legal right not to take part in the military part of the army.

"Conscientious objectors do not avoid the draft," he said. "They are drafted just like everybody else, but for civilian rather than military duties."

He pointed out that this option to choose not to take part in the military part of the armed forces was completely within the framework of the draft system. He said that there are two national campaigns being conducted by students on military conscription.

One campaign, spearheaded by Communist groups involves "every type of draft dodging, including homosexuality and the use of pep pills," Davidson said.

The SDS organization does not support or endorse such tactics, according to Davidson.

"The SDS approach is primarily educational. Everything is on a legal basis," he explained. It calls for the organization to distribute information on conscientious objection, to tell high school and college students "this possibility is your legal right," he explained.

Davidson said that when a person registers with his local draft board as a conscientious objector, he will be checked by the board if it has reasons to suspect he really might not be sincere in his objection.

He said that if his request is rejected the FBI will carry on an extensive investigation of the individual's complete past to check the real reasons for objecting.

The draft laws have been changed in the last few years by Supreme Court decisions, according to Davidson, so that the original religious basis for sincere objectors has been broadened to include more people.

The pamphlet explaining the movement toward conscientious objectors says that during World War II there were approximately 3,999 draft-age conscientious objectors, of whom 6,088 went to prison. Of the nearly 67,000 who did not go to prison, approximately 12,000 served as guinea pigs for dangerous medical experiments, worked in forestry camps, mental hospitals and other civilian service projects; about 25,000 were inducted into the armed forces for noncombatant duty, and the remainder were not classified as available for service.

The pamphlet explains that in the Selective Service and Training Act of 1948, as amended by the Universal Military Training law of 1951, the U. S. government provides alternative non-military service for the individual, "who, by reason of religious training and belief is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form".

"If the same pattern continues to hold," the pamphlet says, "most young men who file a sincere claim will win legal recognition and will be assigned to noncombatant military service (1-A-O) or to civilian service (1-O) with non-profit or government agencies. "But there will be exceptions, and work remains to be done in getting the government to extend recognition to all types of conscientious objection, including humanitarian and philosophical as well as religious."

"We do not believe that fear of imprisonment or even death should deter a conscientious objector, any more than fear of injury or death would deter the man who honestly believes that his fundamental values will be advanced by war."

The pamphlet is sponsored by the War Resisters League in New York City and a number of other organizations including the Students for a Democratic Society.

Excited Queen Wishes Team Luck

By STEVEN JORDAN
Senior Staff Writer

"I was just so surprised! I saw Vicki coming toward me, and I watched the crown coming up over my head. I still can't believe it."

Homecoming Queen Candy May was describing the ceremonies Friday night that revealed her selection as the 1965 football queen of the University.

"I didn't even think about the contest until the initial elections in the dorms. I thought the candidates would be seniors," the junior speech major said. "I didn't know that only juniors were eligible."

Miss May expressed gratitude to "all the kids who helped me here at Selleck."

"I would especially like to thank the girls who helped with the skit and the guys that put up the sign," she said. "There were really too many helping to thank them each personally."

The dance this year was more successful than last year's event, Miss May commented.

"Even though most kids wore street clothes, the turnout was a lot better," she said.

Miss May placed a few telephone calls after she had been chosen queen.

"I called my grandparents, my aunt and uncle, my sister and, of course, my guy at the Naval Academy," she said. "My father was thrilled with the autographed football I received. It is the first one we've ever had in the house—there are four girls in the family."

Miss May is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Arnold May of Omaha.

Activities for Miss May this week include interviews at KLIN and KFOR radio stations, appearances at the Lions club and the Seratoma club, a welcome for a plane-load of alumni from California and the pep rally.

"Of course, Saturday is the busy day," she said. "There's the game, departmental coffees, the alumni luncheon, the royalty banquet and the Shearing concert."

Miss May, her attendants and all their parents will be seated in Box 41 during the game. The queen will be presented at halftime with Mrs. John Morrow, Pep Queen of 1940.

"I wish the team luck in the game," Miss May said. "They have the ability, I know."

What activities will follow this weekend? "I think it will be time to start studying again," she said.

Students Buy More Permits

Sales of parking permits have increased greatly over the last year, according to Capt. Eugene Masters of the University Police Dept.

"We can't tell how much of the increase is due to the increase in enrollment and how much is due to the increase in the fine for parking without a permit, but last year a total of 4,264 permits were issued and we've issued 3,760 so far this year," commented Masters.

"We're selling them every day," he said. "Some go without until they're ticketed for no permit and then they may take out a permit when they pay the five dollars."

Both a permit and a fine for not having a permit now costs five dollars, he explained. The fine until this year was only one dollar.

Masters said that when someone comes the first time to pay a five dollar fine for not having a permit, he can also get a permit free.

He said that space was a problem and that they couldn't let people park in University parking lots unless they had been recognized as valid students or faculty and had permits.

The money received from the permits, fines and parking meters goes to pay for parking lots, office expenditures and motor equipment costs.

Police Chief Denies Name Taking Report

Police Chief Joseph Carroll denied reports that Lincoln police took names of speakers at Sunday night's teach-in to turn over to the FBI. "Of course we had an officer there," Carroll said, "but we take this precaution at any large public gathering—even high school football games."

A representative from the FBI was present at the teach-in, but had no connection with the Lincoln Police Department.

University To Hold Dante Conference

Eight University departments will cooperate in presenting what is believed to be the nation's first large conference on the Fourteenth Century Italian writer, Dante, and his contributions to our civilization.

Nine scholars from leading universities across the nation will speak next Monday and Tuesday during the two-day meeting at Sheldon Art Gallery which will commemorate the 700th anniversary of Dante's birth.

Dr. William Bowsky, associate professor of history, and Dr. Roberto Esquenazi-Mayo, chairman and professor of the Romance languages, are the main organizers of the conference.

Bowsky explained that Dante was one of the few men in history who influenced thought and is a basic part of study in as many as eight departments of education. He said that Dante is studied in philosophy, art, English, the Germanic languages, political science and the classics.

Dante, along with Shakespeare and Goethe, he said, is one of the three greatest literary figures.

"Dante's greatest work, the 'Divine Comedy', which describes man's journey through Hell, purgatory and paradise deals with many facets of human nature, for example moral, spiritual and intellectual problems, which are still the same today," he said.

Bowsky stressed that Dante was one of the first really modern men who was "greater than the times he lived in" and who was a transitional figure between the Middle Ages and the Renaissance.

He said that the Italian language was basically shaped by Dante's writings.

Esquenazi said that several European universities have conducted similar conferences on Dante, but that Americans in the past have often neglected to stress this non-English writer.

The nine speakers at this conference will present papers and speeches written especially for the meeting. They will be divided into two basic types, papers on Dante's contributions and papers on specific problems connected with Dante scholarship.

Stressing that this conference is for the students and the public, Bowsky said it would give students a chance to see how university professors gain knowledge and scholastic opinions on great men.

Scholars who will take part in the conference represent history, romance language, political science, philosophy and English departments from all over the nation.

They include Gene Brucker, University of California at Berkeley; Davy Carozza, University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee; Rocco Vanasco, University of Nebraska; Creighton Gilbert, Brandeis University in New York; Edward Lewis, Oberlin University in Ohio; Howard Adelson, City University in New York, and Otto Bird, Notre Dame University in Indiana.

Other speakers include Robert Hall, Cornell University in New York and Francis Newman, Harpur University in New York.

The conference will also have a book exhibit from the Fiske Dante Library at Cornell which Bowsky described as the "greatest Dante library."

The conference is being sponsored financially by the University of Nebraska Research Council.

Students Compete In Dairy Judging

Chicago and Montreal, Canada, were the destinations of three University dairy students as they traveled to compete in dairy judging contests.

Members of the team are James Shey, Lonnie Dineen, and Ron Wilton. Their coach is T. A. Evans, Extension dairy marketing specialist.

The three competed in a regional dairy products judging contest in Chicago, Friday. Today they are competing in an international collegiate dairy products judging contest in Montreal.

Each team is required to judge samples of milk, butter, ice cream, cheddar cheese and cottage cheese. First and second prizes in the international contest consist of $2,300 and $2,150 scholarships, respectively, to the institutions represented by the teams.

'Y' Groups To Sponsor Talk Series

The "Inner City" of Lincoln will be the subject of a series of programs the first of which will be held Sunday, at 2:30 p.m. at the Malone Community Center at 2030 T Street.

The programs are sponsored by the Nebraska District of the Student YMCA and YWCA and are open to the public.

Gene Pokorny, member of the Nebraska District Executive Board, said that the first program will be concerned with the problems in the depressed areas of Lincoln, such as health and poor housing. Statistics and facts will be presented by persons such as Larry Drost of the city Health Office and the Lincoln City Planning Director Douglas Brogren.

Drost will present the results of a recently completed health survey of the "inner city." The "inner city," Pokorny explained, is a sociological term for depressed urban areas.

City plans for the depressed areas will be explained by the Lincoln City planning director.

"This first meeting is to provide a general background for the second meeting, to be held in November, in which we'll be concerned with the effects of the conditions," Pokorny commented.

The second meeting, Pokorny said, will discuss the dependency on welfare in these areas, counseling for them and the general cause and effect relationship.

What students can do, what the Malone Center is doing and the war on poverty will be discussed at a third meeting.

"Students from this campus and Wesleyan are already helping as tutors for the Malone Center. We still could use more help, however, if any more students are interested," Pokorny said.

These meetings are local preparations for students who plan to work in the ghettos of St. Louis or Chicago in December, 1966, under programs sponsored by the YMCA and YWCA National Student Assembly.

The Nebraska District of Student YMCA and YWCA includes chapters on both University campuses and on the University of Wesleyan.
