

Kids Get To See Christmas Lights

By Bob Wetherell
Children at the Nebraska State Orthopedic Hospital in Lincoln were treated to a bus ride around the city to see the Christmas decorations last night.

group of about 25 University students working under the sanction of the Nebraska Human Resources Research Council, sponsored the project.

"Many of the children at the hospital have little chance to ever get out, and we thought this was an especially good time for them to see the city," stated Ann Kotouc, head of the group. "We think the children enjoyed it immensely."

The bus used was the alumni bus owned by twelve University alums. They supplied the bus free of charge and drove it also. "They even extended the insurance on it so we could use it," Miss Kotouc stated.

Children who could not go on the trip for some reason were entertained by members of Project while the bus was gone. They walked from ward to ward singing Christmas carols and supplied a Santa Claus to give candy canes to the children.

On the bus, the children traveled down to City Campus and saw the lights downtown. On campus they saw where the members of Project, their friends, went to school. Then they went on a pre-planned route, singing carols and joking with the bus driver.

Members of Orthopedic Project try to form a close relationship with one child at the hospital, discover some of the facets of his personality, and develop whatever potential he may have, according to Miss Kotouc. "By working with just one child, we feel that we can better help the individual child."

One of the children said it better. "I had fun!"

Husker Band Prepares For Bowl Appearances

The Cornhusker Marching Band's five days in Miami will be filled with music, marching and merrymaking. The 160 bandmen will get their first look at the Orange Bowl half-time, concert and marching music Dec. 27 in Lincoln, and will leave the next morning for the Ft. Lauderdale Airport. restrictions slowly than to have to restore them at a later time."

She added that although Chancellor Clifton Hardin had told AWS Board they were free to make decisions concerning University administration, the AWS Board was in "a position different from other students" and had been delegated authority by the administration and therefore must consider the viewpoints of the Administration, parents and the community before making any decisions.

Some type of unlimited hours or senior keys system would be presented in February, Miss Dowling said and pointed to the change as an example of keeping up with the times.

Change Takes Time
Miss Whitney added that changes in regulations take time because "it is hard to anticipate consequences" and that while the Board appreciated the suggestions and would "give them due consideration, after which we will do as we see fit."

Discussion revolved about whether or not there was a way for the women students to speed the decision.

"These matters are not decided by popular vote," said Miss Dowling, "but on the basis of good reasons. You have elected us as your representatives and have given us responsibilities."

"There is more to consider than majority opinion," said

Miss Whitney. "Government is not that flexible and we had no previous idea that there was such interest in the rules."

They explained the decisions were voted on by the 21 board members who were elected at an All-Women's election in the spring. Candidates for election are slated after AWS interviews.

The coeds were reminded that it was unreasonable to demand changes in a period of one or two weeks and that a compromise must be reached.

"We realize that this is the initial step," said Miss May. "All we are doing is offering suggestions — without suggestions nothing can be done."

After the meeting Miss Whitney said that she was pleased with the interest and concern shown by the group who supported the suggestions.

Hope Given Chance
"The meeting went very well," she said. "I just hope this group will give us a chance. We still don't know if these suggestions are those of a majority of women. We are pleased though with the interest shown in student government—in matters like this the interest has got to come from the women."

"Good meeting—we've been wanting this for years," said Miss Dowling. "The interest seems to have arisen from the current liberal trend towards student rights and I, personally, am glad to see it."

Miss Hiner and Miss May were not so optimistic.

"I don't expect any fast action," Miss Hiner said, "because everything has to be 'transitional' and be given 'serious consideration.' I think everything went in one ear and out the other."

Miss May said, "It's now up to the Board. The AWS constitution allows no petitions or popular vote so the ultimate decision is theirs."

"The Administration, the chancellor and the Board of Regents have given them unlimited authority," she continued, "and we have no say—even the candidates are slated by the Board."

"Now we know how little we can do," commented Miss Hiner.
