

Not 'Apathy'

stable; there is nothing to raise the social "dust."

Needs Met
"To get down to the physiological basis," explained Dunn, "the human creature has certain needs, such as food, clothing, etc. that must be met. Here, they are being met. Any higher psychological needs that students appear to have, are also being met. They have not developed a lot of needs. The student comes from unsophisticated backgrounds and his needs reflect this."

If new developments were added, he said, the students might become unhappy. But there are few minority groups around the could stir things up, and there aren't any organizations that foster contempt. There is nothing to attract the socially active student to Nebraska; he goes somewhere else, Dunn added. "The University student is comfortable. All his needs are being met. He is surrounded by a 'benign paternalism.'" He either brought his "teddy bear" with him or else he was handed one when he stepped in the door. This paternalism is conscientious and well intentioned, but has the potential for danger," said Dunn.

Paternalism
The objection to this paternalism, he pointed out, is that if the situation changes so that initiative is needed in the future, leadership may not emerge.

The reason why apathy is not the correct word to use, explained Dunn, is that apathy comes from accepting defeat. The University student has not given up; rather he is comfortable and his needs are being met. To be interested he has to possess needs which are not being fulfilled. "The people here love the students so much that they, the students, have no real needs," said Dunn.

"Interest in Viet Nam is not strong because the war is too comfortably remote. It with the gratification of the student's needs. The information from Viet Nam is mellowed; the news is a soothing syrup. Therefore the student isn't really affected by the war."

"Flunk-Out Rate"
Concerning other areas of academic life, Dunn said that if the flunk-out rate, for instance was higher, there would be more overall interest.

"For instance, a characteristic of Berkeley is that it has a high flunk-out rate. The chances for a student's needs being gratified are less than here. Therefore, the students take a more active part in things. They are somewhat more insecure and feel the need to fight. There are black clouds on the academic horizon at Berkeley, but here, at the University, the clouds are pink."

In conclusion, Dunn stated that students will be in a good position as long as there is no major change in the fulfillment of their needs. It is his opinion that there would have to be a big change to upset the relatively stable Nebraska society.

NU African Students To Speak At Teach-in

University African students are among those tentatively scheduled to speak at a teach-in on South Africa March 21.

The teach-in, part of a week-long South African program March 14-21, is being sponsored by Students for a Democratic Society (SDS).

Carl Davidson, SDS president, said other speakers at the teach-in will be representatives from black and white South Africa. None of the names of the speakers have been revealed with the exception of the Rev. Hudson Phillips of the United Campus Christian Fellowship.

The Rev. Phillips, Davidson said, will speak on the religious tie-ins in the contemporary social revolutions in Black Africa, the area of the continent below the Sahara desert.

More definite plans for the program will be made next week, Davidson said. Other events also tentatively scheduled for the week include literature tables on South African problems, films and a possible demonstration by SDS members.

The demonstration, Davidson said, would be held in front of a city business place that carries on substantial business with the South African government, which SDS contends is oppressive to the Negro natives of the area.

SDS members from four other states will be on the campus the weekend of March 18, 19 and 20 Davidson said. Students from Colorado, Kansas, Missouri and Iowa will be here to take part in the final days of the South African program and to meet to set up a regional SDS government.

Officials Applaud Concern

Educational funds, women's housing, and Viet Nam protests are some of the issues being discussed by college students across the country, according to other campus newspapers.

More than 2,500 students from Colorado State University recently demonstrated their concern over lack of state funds for higher education, in an orderly and well-run demonstration held in front of the State Capitol in Denver.

According to the Colorado State University newspaper, many officials applauded the students' concern in the matter.

A group of nine students representing four campus organizations at Kansas University recently presented a list of 24 questions on administrative policy to school officials, reports the campus newspaper. The students insisted that the questions be answered.

The newspaper at Ohio University says that a protest was planned against U.S. Viet Nam policy to coincide with General Maxwell Taylor's speech at the school in Athens, Ohio.

Student participation in reorganized committee structure of the Purdue University Senate has been approved over active opposition. The campus newspaper reports that students will now have voting representation on nine of the 16 committees.

Purdue University's AWS is sponsoring an ATOM Week (Aid To Our Men Week). The traditional week includes events in which the women plan entertainment for the men students.

At Stillwater, Okla., the university paper describes a trilogy of films produced by Ingmar Bergman about man's need for God and man's need for man. The films will be shown in connection with Religious Emphasis Week at the school.

The Illinois paper says that its student senate is voting on extending apartment privileges to undergraduate men and women who are over 21, or to seniors, to live in apartments if they desire.
