ASUN To Present Resolution Calling For Special Session

By Jan Itkin
Senior Staff Writer

Student Senate will request the Board of Regents Tuesday to ask for a special session of the Legislature to deal with the University's financial problems.

This request will be presented as an alternative to the University's announced $40 fee increase for next year.

At a special meeting of the Student Senate Sunday, a resolution was unanimously passed "requesting and strongly urging the University Board of Regents to ask Gov. Morrison to call a special session of the Nebraska Legislature for the purpose of solving the current instructional financial problem."

Vice Chancellor Joseph Soshnik earlier announced that student fees for next year will probably be raised by approximately $40 because of a disparity in money requested from the Legislature and the amount needed.

Miscalculation

Many sources including a report published by the Student Senate last week have stated that this disparity was caused because of the University Administration's miscalculation as to projected enrollment.

At another special session of Student Senate last week, it was pointed out that one means of avoiding the $40 increase would be to have the Legislature appropriate more funds for the University before next semester.

Bob Samuelson, chairman of the ASUN Ad Hoc committee investigating the proposed tuition hike, made the motion Sunday and added, "This act is a necessity. We would be letting the Board of Regents know that we are strongly in accord as to what we want them to do. Let them know where the students stand."

Resolution

Discussion revolved around whether to have an ASUN delegation present the resolution to the Regents or whether to ask Chancellor Clifford Hardin to present it on their behalf.

"We should have the students do it," said Kent Neumeister, ASUN president. "A University is composed of three diverse elements—the students, the Administration and the faculty. Since this is coming from the students, we should present it ourselves."

He added that it was "essential that ASUN go on record" as favoring this move.

Sen. Skip Sorief said, "ASUN would still be going on record, but we should take the proper channels which would mean going through the Chancellor."

Communication Channels

Sen. Cuz Guenzel noted that one of the goals of the ASUN this year has been to establish the proper channels of communication and therefore ASUN should "go ourselves and take direct action."

"Direct communication is what we have been working for all year," noted Samuelson. "By all means, we should consult Hardin, but first we need an approved motion from which to work."

Sen. Dave Snyder said that if at all possible the students should present the resolution themselves after consulting with Hardin. He felt the Chancellor should present it only as a last resort.

It was decided that after consultation with Hardin, the students would present the resolution at Tuesday's Regents meeting if at all possible. The Senate would ask Hardin to present the resolution if the students could not.

consisted of whether it would be advisable to ask the governor directly to call the session.

It was decided that the best thing to do would be to go through the University channels first.

The Board of Regents will most likely comply with Student Senate's request, according to Clarence Swanson, Regents president.

He said that the Regents will request Gov. Frank Morrison to call a special session of the Legislature to solve the University's financial dilemma.

Swanson spoke with the Daily Nebraskan following the special Student Senate meeting Sunday. During that meeting the Senate passed a resolution urging the Regents to ask the governor to call a special session.

"We (the Regents) have debated and talked over the possibility of asking the Governor to call a special session previously," Swanson noted, "but we didn't think a special session was possible."

Expense

The probable expense of a special session was one factor Swanson mentioned that might cause reluctance on the part of the Governor in calling a special session to deal with the University problem.

"Had there been additional reasons — like apportionment," he continued, "a special session would not seem so impractical. But to call one on our (the University's) account is not likely."

He added, however, that asking "is not wrong. We'll probably ask and let the Governor decide what to do."

Student Presentation

Swanson noted that the Student Senate resolution could either be presented by the students or by Chancellor Clifford Hardin — "either way is perfectly all right," but that he himself favored having Hardin present it.

"Then the resolution would be sure to be presented Tuesday," he added.

Chancellor Hardin said Sunday that it was "up to the Student Senate to decide who would present the motion."

"I told them Tuesday that I would be willing to present such a motion if they wished," he said.

He added, "I would not venture an opinion as to the weight such a resolution would carry, but can only say I will be happy to see that the resolution is presented."

Administration Hasn't Requested Special Session

The University administration has not requested the governor to call a special session of the Legislature keyed to University financial matters, Gov. Frank Morrison's office has reported.

University officials Thursday informed the Student Senate that a special session possibility has been discussed with some state officials.

Gene Budig, the governor's administrative assistant, said he was authorized to make a one-sentence statement in the matter:

"The chancellor of the University has not asked the Governor to call a special session of the Legislature."

Birth Control Is Panel Topic

A panel discussion on birth control will be held in the East Union Thursday at 4 p.m.

Discussion leaders will include Dr. Richard Garlinghouse, Lincoln physician; Dr. Hazel Fox, chairman and professor of food and nutrition; the Rev. Raymond Hain of the Catholic Student Center; and Sam Stern, graduate student.

The discussion is part of the East Union lounge series.

Students Describe Difficulty

By Julie Morris
Senior Staff Writer

Living in rented rooms, private homes, assorted apartments and even trailer houses are approximately 4,000 off-campus independent students.

These are students who commute daily to the campus, who create a large part of the parking problem, who help keep the city bus lines in business and who want to feel they are part of the campus while maintaining an independent status.

Most of these independents live off campus by choice. Some live off campus for financial reasons. These students find there are great advantages to their mode of life and, at the same time, great disadvantages.

Freedom, Comfort

One could comment that the availability of the family car is a definite asset if one is living with parents. Another student noted that living in an apartment provides a great deal of freedom with the comforts of a real home.

Disadvantages range from difficulty in meeting girls to communication problems with campus organizations, according to students interviewed.

Rich Meier, who lived in a dormitory last year and is presently living in an apartment, said his main complaint about off-campus living is the poor social life.

"Off-campus independents who didn't grow up in Lincoln are in sort of a limbo," Meier said. He explained that social life for this type of student is too often restricted to one or two friends, and that for him, meeting girls is much more difficult than it was when he lived in a dorm.

"I've sort of withdrawn since I moved off campus," Meier said. "It's very hard to keep up with the campus."

Lacks Information

"The off-campus independent doesn't have anyone to tell him what is going on, and he has to really work at it to find out," Bob Bogott, UNICORN president, observed.

Bogott said that campus organizations "don't make any special or particular effort" to inform off-campus independents of their activities. "But," Bogott added, "this doesn't mean they

SDS Teach-In To Climax South African Program

The Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) teach-in on South Africa is scheduled for Saturday at 3 p.m. in the Nebraska Union.

Speakers for the teach-in, the second ever to be held on the campus, include a campus minister, a professor of English, an African student and an SDS officer.

Karl Shapiro, poet and professor of English, will speak at the teach-in along with the Rev. Hudson Phillips of the United Campus Christian Fellowship. Carl Davidson, secretary-treasurer of SDS and Gowdin Dubay of Rhodesia will also appear.

Other speakers have been tentatively scheduled, according to Davidson.

The teach-in is to be the culmination of an SDS South African Program which will open Wednesday. The program, according to Davidson, will include literature tables, speeches at Hyde Park, a possible SDS demonstration in downtown Lincoln and films on Africa.

SDS also plans to contact the offices of Lincoln corporations that carry on business in South Africa or with the South African government and invite the management to attend the programs.

The purpose of the South African Program, Davidson explained, is to study the conditions of the area before a revolution or other violence there brings it into the world scene. The national SDS will be holding similar programs.

In connection with the South African program, SDS members from five states will be meeting on campus this weekend. These delegates will be here to participate in the teach-in and to work on plans for the regional SDS coordinating body now being established.

Films scheduled for the South African Program include a documentary about the life of black South African and, tentatively, a feature length film titled "Come Back, Africa." The first film will be shown in the Union at 2 p.m. Saturday.

NU Phi Gams Host Convention

The University's chapter of Phi Gamma Delta was host to seventy visiting Fijis over the weekend.

They were participating in the annual section convention, this year held in Lincoln. The purpose of the convention was to give the Fijis a chance to meet each other and discuss mutual problems.

Seminars were held on rushing, public and graduate relations, finances, and pledge training.

Saturday night a banquet was held at the Knolls. Bob Alexander assistant national secretary of the fraternity, was the featured speaker.

In addition to the host Lambda Nu chapter, other chapters attending were from Kansas University, Missouri University, William Jewell College, and Westminster College.
