stressed, "but rather with precious warm, red blood. It is a frightful price to pay, especially when you consider that the people to whom it is given let it fritter away."

Cassius Clay was also included in McFarland's speech. "He changed his name to Cassius 'X' so that he could sign it. Here is a man who is classified I-Y by the draft board because he cannot comprehend simple orders. Yet he is a millionaire at the age of thirty. Talk about opportunity, here is a true example."

"But when he is reclassified, we see pictures of him asking 'Why me!' He goes to Africa and speaks against America. He does all this, but it was the opportunity given to him by our way of life that made him a millionaire. It is this way of life which he doesn't want to defend."

'Not Intellectualism'

Another subject was Allen Ginsberg, a recent visitor to the University. "What kind of an opportunity, what kind of an America would you have if you got what Ginsberg wants. We have to realize the dirty, foul-mouthed people don't compose intellectualism."

McFarland expressed the idea that Americans must stop individuals from making a career out of being depressed. He said that there is no reason why Americans should not help those who are helpless, but we have to teach them how not to be poor.

"Our country has a spiritual heritage. It gave the world a concept of freedom based on a sovereign individual, created in God's image. What good does it do to teach freedom from God when we can't even teach that God exists. It is like invalidating our birth certificates."

"You can't rewrite the Declaration of Independence without the Ten Commandments."

Individuality, Opportunity

In conclusion, McFarland said that the arch of freedom has individuality and opportunity as its bases.

"The American way provides the chance to be happy, but it doesn't guarantee the same distance up the ladder. There is only one system that does that, and it is Communism. Only it allows no one above the bottom rung," he said.

"As an individual, you have the right to step on the bottom rung and more important, to climb."

McFarland was invited to speak by Mu Epsilon Nu, a national undergraduate honorary fraternity for men in education.

THE EXTENT OF POWER... of a possible permanent interdom council was the topic under consideration by members of the present Interdom Coordinating Committee Tuesday.

Dorm Delegates Disagree On Distribution Of Duties

By Nancy Henrikson Junior Staff Writer

Representatives of the dormitories disagreed on the allotment of power and jurisdiction to a permanent dorm council during the Interdom Coordinating Committee (IDCC) meeting Tuesday evening.

The need for unity between the dorms and a central governing body was discussed by the temporary committee which is now functioning as a central body.

Marv Almy, IDCC president, said, "We have to take action as a unified group; otherwise we don't have any reason for existence."

He listed areas of interest and concern in which a permanent council could possibly take action.

Tony Redman of Cather Hall said that the functions of a permanent council don't necessitate a strong body.

"We don't seem to have problems. What we're working for is progress," said Jim Ludwig, Cather's new president. He added that anything that changes the status quo operation in the dorms is out of bounds.

Cather representative John Decker stated, "We don't require anything but coordination. Power will be supplied by the name, by the very fact that residence halls are represented on the council."

presented on the council."

Areas For Action

Among the functions listed by Almy for a permanent council were representing the students with the housing office, promoting unified action in campus elections and helping new dorms to organize student governments.

He also suggested that a dorm council could supply a tutoring service, determine discipline rules and represent the students in central planning agencies in order to have a say in architectural plans and the selection of student assistants.

"Most of the issues coming forward will be common to everybody, and we must have the power to handle these," Almy said. "We're here to serve the dorms, but once we've made a decision, we must have a unity of face."

'Policy Maker'

Larry Anderson of Sellen Quadrangle said, "I think this group should act as a policy maker for all the dorms, and they, in turn, should all go along with its decisions."

Almy appointed a committee of four to start working on a dorm council constitution to be presented at the next meeting.

Members of the committee and the dormitory they represent are Keith Olsen, Burr West; Elaine Kallos, Pound; Jim Ludwig, Cather; and Almy, Sellen.

In other business, all the dorms with the exception of Love Memorial, reported that they had or would approve the contracts for an interdom dance May 6. Because Love Memorial does not have a separate budget, it could not allocate its share to the dance budget.

2-Year Veterans Suffer

The 1966 GI Bill of Rights will not give the draftee enough benefits to see him through college if he serves the regular two-year tour of duty.

According to a pamphlet published by the Commerce Clearing House of Chicago (CCH), the 1966 Bill provides only one day of school per day of service. Because of this, a two-year veteran will get benefits for less than three academic years.

Previous World War II and Korean Conflict Bills provided one and a half days of schooling for each day of service. Therefore, a veteran of two years would receive three years of benefits, enough for four academic years.

The new bill also differs from previous ones in two other respects. One is that GI's who completed their service duty as long as eleven years ago are qualified. The other aspect is that anyone entering the services in the future can count on the same benefits.

The pamphlet points out some other technicalities that the veteran should consider.

A GI who goes to school, providing he is unmarried, will receive $100 per month. If he attends a university where a quarter of class is alternated with a quarter of work, he will get only $80 a month.

If the veteran goes to college on a federal scholarship, he will receive no benefits from the bill. If, however, the scholarship comes from a private source, the benefits will be paid.

An exception to this scholarship provision is the Fulbright Scholarship, which provides for study abroad. The GI can collect both the scholarship and the benefits from the 1966 Bill, provided the college he attends is approved by the Veterans Administration.

An ex-GI receives no benefits for on-the-job or apprenticeship training, nor does he receive them for studying certain subjects. Benefits for other subjects are received only if they include college credits. He can receive benefits for still others only if he plans to become a professional practitioner in his area of study.

Nonviolent Prophet To Speak Sunday

A former companion to Gandhi, Hindu nationalist and prophet of the philosophy of nonviolence, will speak on campus this weekend.

Dr. Amiya Chakravarty, currently professor of Oriental religions at the University of Boston, will speak Sunday at 8 p.m. at the Nebraska Union.

Chakravarty will also moderate an informal discussion on "Gandhi and the philosophy of nonviolence" at the Wesley Foundation at 4 p.m. Sunday. A third speaking engagement for the visitor will be Saturday at 8 p.m., when he is scheduled to speak to the India Association in the Nebraska Union.

Chakravarty was a companion to Gandhi from 1946 until the latter's assassination in 1948 by a Hindu radical.

Gandhi was instrumental in securing India's independence from the British. His chief assistant, Jawarhalal Nehru later became prime minister of the country. Gandhi was known for his profession of the philosophy of nonviolence. In the early years of demonstrations for freedom, he often called off demonstrations when they erupted in violence.

Chakravarty's Sunday night lecture will be on the United States and Modern India. In addition to his connection with Gandhi, Chakravarty served as official adviser to the United Nations Indian delegation in 1950-51.

He also served as a member of the Conference on Religion and Philosophy of the United Nations Economic and Social Council conference (UNESCO) and won the UNESCO prize for his travel book "Chalo Jai" in 1964.

Chakravarty is being sponsored by the Unitarian Universalist Association, the University Council on Religion and the Unitarian Church of Lincoln. He is presently traveling across the country under Unitarian Church sponsorship.

He will receive $500 and an expense-paid trip to the SAMA convention in Los Angeles, Calif., in May.

His research report will appear in the May issue of "The New Physician."

Landers was also named one of the winners of the Medical Arts Salon, division of medical photomicrography, competition sponsored by SAMA and Eaton Labs.

His research, which won first place in competition among staff physicians, residents and students, was titled "Observations on Locations and Ultrastructure of Duodenal Lymphocytes, a Light and Electron Microscopic Study."
