

KSU Greeks To Agree With 'No Restrictions'

Housing discriminations spring carnivals, and demonstrations on Viet Nam were the events this past week at other campuses around the country.

At Kansas State, the fraternities and sororities have assured the administration that they will comply with the Board of Regents policy concerning housing discrimination. The houses were asked to submit letters stating they had no restrictions on membership for reasons of race, religion or nationality.

The Miami Hurricane of the University of Miami reports that the recent Mardi Gras held there was a huge success. The weekend carnival cleared over $9,000 profit most of it being made from the some ninety booths which provided the entertainment.

Kansas University is holding similar festivities for students there. The annual Spring Fling was held last weekend and featured a dance with The Kingsmen of "Louie, Louie" fame. Games were also held, including a volleyball tournament and sport car races. The weekend was completed with the "Spring Sing" held Sunday night.

Both sides of the Viet Nam question were discussed at the International Days of Protest at the University of Illinois. Students and faculty gathered at the Free Speech Forum last Friday to hear spontaneous presentations on both sides of the question.

Hecklers provided amusement for the meeting as nine students mounted an air duct near the forum carrying a sign reading "Give 'em Hell in Viet Nam." Other than this the meeting was orderly and ended in a stalemate between the two groups.

A parking lot turned into a virtual bog by rains caused many students at Iowa State to take to walking. Many residents of Storm Hall have refused to use the parking lot provided for their use because of its poor condition. As one man put it, "There's lots of room in the lot, but there's also lots of mud."

The predicament also raised attention to the present parking restrictions on the surrounding streets. Students seeking to avoid the mud have instead parked on nearby streets where such parking is prohibited, thus creating another problem. The whole matter is now being taken under consideration by the administration and the city council of Ames.

Book theft is now a problem at Colorado State, as library personnel have discovered it is possible to take books from the night depository. The bin which is emptied periodically becomes easy game for "anyone with a long arm." Most thefts take place during the weekends and vacations when the bin builds up a large collection of books.

Fifty students at the University of Iowa picketed the Iowa City Draft Board in protest of the war in Viet Nam. The students carried signs reading "U.S. Killing Civilians to Prove it is Right!" and "LBJ-Biggest Threat to Peace."

There were others protesting the protesters, and one student joined the demonstration carrying a sign reading "We is Non-Violent Peace Creeps." Both groups remained orderly and normal business proceeded in the area.

Meanwhile at the University of Colorado a round table discussion dealing with the future of higher education in Colorado was held by the Committee of Higher Education.

The meeting came to the conclusion that more junior colleges were needed, thereby enabling Colorado to raise its admission standards. Such additions would also enable students to go to a more conveniently located school at less cost to him for the first two years of his college career.

School and its cost to the student was also under current discussion at Tulane University. A recent increase in university fees was explained by Jesse Morgan, business manager at Tulane.

"The University was operating at a deficit, a situation which could not continue," Morgan said. The change, effective September, 1966, would involve a tuition increase of $150 per semester.

Hardin's Daughter Is AWS President At KU

The daughter of University Chancellor Clifford Hardin was elected president of AWS day evening.

Cindy Hardin, who is a sophomore at KU, is a member of Pi Beta Phi society and has been on KU's AWS board since she was a freshman.

In an interview over the phone with the Daily Nebraskan, Miss Hardin described herself as following a middle of the road AWS philosophy.

She said the main thing her administration will be concerned with is revising the KU's AWS constitution, especially the areas of representation.

Miss Hardin noted that an AWS convention had recently suggested new rules at KU whereby there would be no hours for seniors, juniors or second semester sophomores.

She said that these new rules now have to be approved by the AWS Senate, which Miss Hardin is in charge of, and the KU administration.

"I'm for part of the new hours policy, but they do have to be worked out practically with the Administration," she explained.

She noted that the newly suggested hours policy has both some good and bad points and that the old AWS administration would be working them out mostly.

Miss Hardin said that AWS under her leadership will work with the KU Administration since "we really all have the same interests (students and Administration) in an educational institution."

ZBT Asks Approval

Zeta Beta Tau representatives presented a program Wednesday night at Interfraternity Council meeting regarding their desire to colonize on the University campus.

Arnold Stern, a ZBT alumna, now of Omaha, told IFC members that the colony would have the "full financial and moral support" of about 250 alumni in the Lincoln and Omaha area.

ZBT, a Jewish fraternity, was originally chartered on the campus in 1922, but their charter was suspended in 1962 due to "basically manpower problems," according to Stern. The ZBTs currently own the house at 1345 R, which houses Chi Phi fraternity.

House Available
Stern said the four-year lease expires in September, 1966 and the colony would move into the house if given approval to colonize.

Jim Cook, Chi Phi, said his fraternity does not now have a house if the ZBT colony is granted approval, but that the fraternity would probably go off-campus.

John Kenagy, IFC vice president, said he would "guarantee" that the ZBTs will terminate the Chi Phi lease.

Cook said Chi Phi plans to move into the fraternity-sorority complex in 1967, but in the meantime must increase the number of men that would live in the house.

The present house will accommodate about 30 men while the fraternity complex houses will accommodate about 70.

Bob Harris, Sigma Chi, said he thought the IFC "should not overlook the effect of the lack of a house would have to the Chi Phis."

Enough Men?
Concern was also expressed as whether there would be enough Jewish men to sustain two Jewish fraternities on the campus. Sigma Alpha Mu is the Jewish fraternity currently on campus.

Jay Lefko, IFC treasurer and member of Sigma Alpha Mu, said that on the basis of rush last year, 16 of about 22 Jewish men went through rush and Sigma Alpha Mu pledged 14 of these.

Noting that there are some boys who are not interested in joining a fraternity, Stewart Forbes, Sigma Alpha Mu, said that it was "questionable about the amount of (Jewish) manpower coming down to the University."

Stern told IFC members he thinks there will be enough men to sustain both fraternities. He noted that there are many ZBT legacies that would like to pledge.

He also said that with the increased enrollment in colleges and universities, many Jewish men are finding it difficult to get into out-of-state schools and will come to the University.

The matter will be discussed by the IFC executive council and will make a recommendation, which will be voted on at the IFC meeting next week.

Foreign Students Receive Buddies

Lubbock, Texas (I.P.) — The Student Senate's Foreign Students Committee is initiating a new program this year to help Texas Technological College's international students — a host system.

One American student will serve as a host or "buddy" to a foreign student during his term at Tech. The purpose is to match a foreign student with an American student so both can benefit during the school year.

"The foreign student will benefit by having someone to explain American customs to him, to help him with registration, to answer his questions and to get him involved in campus activities and organizations," said Don Henry, committee chairman.
