Parties Decide Platforms

 ments as to their platforms until candidates are selected.
 Gottschalk, however, explained that the general purposes are expressed in their last year's platform—namely to improve student government by increasing interest and improving participation.
CFDP Proposal
 The central committee of CFDP has drafted a proposal for the party's platform which includes four major points calling for ASUN reform, curriculum reform, a student bill of rights and a critique of the Administration.

 The proposal calling for ASUN reform states that "students have a right and the duty to organize democratic student government with the final power to formulate, legislate and adjudicate all rules and regulations governing student life outside the classroom" providing they are within the law.
 The proposed platform also calls for a change in the nature of the "knowledge factory" and states "the primary purpose of a University is to search for solutions to human problems growing out of human needs."
Critique of the Administration
 The proposal states, is "the right and the duty of the students."
 "When the University as an institution becomes obsolete" students must make it "relevant again" the proposal reads.
 "Our proposals are radical," said Davidson, "but not pie in the sky. They are workable."
 "If student government is just 'Mickey Mouse,'" Abbott added, "why bother with it?"
 He said the party expects to attack the system at the University.
 "The first part of our campaign is going to be asking questions," he noted.

The financial limit is to include all expenses for campaigning, such as printing costs and any expenditures that would give direct aid to the campaign. Financial reports will be due Wednesday, April 27, election day at noon.
 One may vote for fewer than the total eligible in one's college. That is, if the ballot says, "vote for nine," one may vote for fewer than this. Write-in candidates are valid but must receive at least 25 votes to be considered for election.
 Balloting will take place in the Nebraska and East Unions and Love Memorial Library on Wednesday, April 27, from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Senators Establish Campaign Regulation

A meeting of candidates for ASUN positions was held Sunday to explain campaign rules and procedures and to answer any questions about them.
 "We don't want to kill the spirit of the campaign," said Carol Bischoff, chairman of the ASUN electoral commission, "but we want to make sure things don't get out of hand."
 The posters used in the campaign must meet the approval of the Student Activities Office.
 No loudspeakers or publicity on cars is allowed, but if one desires to stage a rally it is permissible with a police escort.
 There will be no campaigning on election day in the buildings in which the election is being held nor group meetings or debates pertaining to the election on that day.
 All organized group campaigning will end by midnight Tuesday, April 26, and all publicity will be down by noon, April 28.
 There is to be no chalking of sidewalks without permission.
 Presidential and vice presidential candidates will be allowed $50 per person for campaign expenses. All those running for Student Senate will be allowed $40.

University Hosts 'Hospitality Day'

Closed-circuit television, French colonial furniture and fish flour were subjects of displays at the "Hospitality Day" Saturday.
 More than 2,000 high school students toured the College of Agriculture and Home Economics at the University to view displays from six departments of home economics for the annual program entitled "New Directions in Home Economics."
 A fashion show was presented by the school on Friday night and Saturday morning. The show was entitled "Mosaic in Fashion" and featured clothes for campus coeds from classroom to date time.

in home economics were exemplified in the combined study of journalism and home economics. A closed-circuit television camera and monitor focused on the importance of journalists in the world of home economics.
 Exhibits in textiles, clothing and design included various types of textiles, fashion illustration and draping. Historic costumes and clothes of the future completed the displays.
 A film, "Early Marriage," discussed the problems of young married couples today. Child development also presented information concerning human development and the family.
 The new home management house was open for tours and work simplification techniques were illustrated. Kitchen planning and storage ideas were demonstrated to the visitors.

The Department of Home Economics Education and Extension showed tools of the trade and examples of home economics in Turkey. The former display concerned different kinds of visual aids available for teaching.
 Family Economics and Management had a number of projects. Cartoons showing home management and finance were followed by a display concerning the selection of cooking utensils.
 Model homes, slides describing housing selection and period styles of furniture were on exhibit. The entire area of family economics and consumer problems was studied in the department's display.
 Experimental foods and factors in cooking were demonstrated in the food and nutrition display. Visitors received a firsthand look at the menus of the future, which included fish flour and algae products. The field of research and institutional management were also on exhibit.
 The expanding opportunities

Natalie Hahn, program chairman described the event as "unique" in that everything was planned exclusively by home economics majors and their advisers.
 Eleven members of the college will journey to Scottsbluff on April 25 to present a portion of Saturday's displays for "Western Day Hospitality Days" in that city, according to Miss Hahn.
 She stated that this gives high school students in the western section of the state a chance to view a condensed version of the regular "Hospitality Day" program.
