

You Can't Win 'em All

By Bob Flasnick

The University of Nebraska grows and grows and grows, but for some reason the intramural facilities at the University are shrinking. This presents a very real problem to Intramural Director Joel Meier and if you don't believe that go over to the antiquated P.E. Building some time and talk to him.

Here, for comparison, are some of the intramural facilities offered by the University of Oklahoma, a school with an enrollment of nearly 3,000 less than Nebraska. The Sooner school has 12 softball diamonds, 12 touch football fields, 21 tennis courts, five basketball courts and one swimming pool.

Nebraska has seven football fields, four softball fields, five basketball courts, six tennis courts and one swimming pool.

The lack of enough intramural football fields at Nebraska forces the championship games to be carried over into the spring. And what is worse, the number of fields could soon be cut to three when the new Womens Physical Education Building is built at 14th and R Street.

The four softball diamonds are not adequate to handle the large number of teams that play in the spring.

Six tennis courts on a campus the size of Nebraska speaks for itself. These six courts not only serve as intramural courts, but also must handle physical education classes, varsity competition and the student body.

Only the two basketball courts in the Intramural Building are open to intramural competition at all times. The two courts in the Coliseum and the single court on East Campus must house a number of other campus activities which make scheduling intramural games in them difficult.

The Coliseum swimming pool must handle every type of swimming that takes place on the campus.

The facilities at Oklahoma are impressive; Iowa State is best equipped for intramurals in the Big Eight. Kansas State is revolutionizing their physical education program and you can look to Nebraska State College in Kearney to see what has been done by another Nebraska School. Nebraska could stand a little of the same.

There are two ways you can look at last Saturday's game with Utah State. You can be pessimistic and look at Nebraska's faltering attempt to move the ball on the ground or you can be optimistic and look at the things Nebraska did well. We'll do the latter.

A number of happy developments came out of the game with the Aggies, among them—

Nebraska showed that it has a number of ends that can consistently catch the ball and that one of them, Tom Penney, is capable of getting behind defenders to give Nebraska a deep threat.

Wayne Weber filled in well for Bob Churchich at quarterback and showed that Nebraska has a capable back up man if not a potential starter in the signal caller from Hastings.

The Nebraska kicking game showed much improvement with sophomore Joe Armstrong averaging over forty yards a punt and Bob Alschwede getting good length and height on kick-offs.

The Husker defense again proved to be strong, allowing the Aggies zero rushing yardage on the ground.

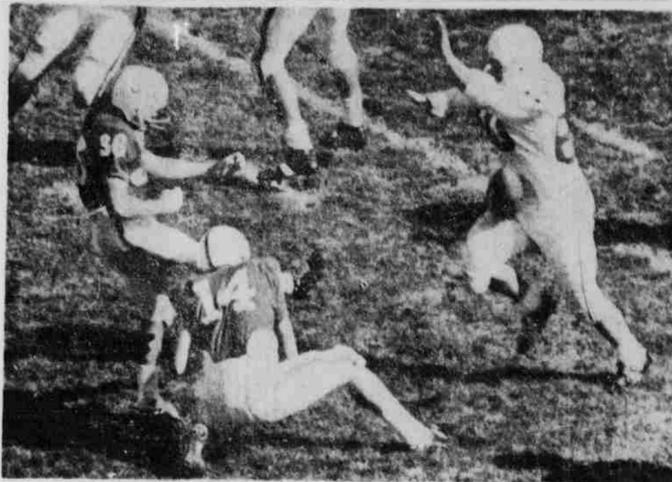

Look for the Huskers to give their best performance so far this season Saturday at Iowa State.

Oooooo . . . an eager Aggie blocks a Larry Wachholtz field goal attempt the hard way.

Nebraska Prepares For ISU Cyclones

"We were happy to win, but we were not satisfied with the way we moved the ball again," said Husker coach Bob Devaney following a 28-7 win over Utah State Saturday.

"I wish I knew what the trouble is, but we'll have to keep working on the problem. Utah State is a big, rugged, good football team, and they gave us fits," he said.

Nebraska now prepares for Iowa State, the Husker's first Big Eight assignment. The Cyclones, smarting from two losses (Wisconsin and Oklahoma) after high pre-season hopes, are led by quarterback Tim VanGalder.

VanGalder led the Cyclones last year in passing so the Huskers can expect to see plenty of aerial fireworks at Ames.

Husker scout Cletus Fischer, who watched the Cyclones lose to the Oklahoma Sooners 33-11, calls ISU's passing game, "A solid threat and Les Webster still runs hard," added Fischer. "You're not just going to rip them up in the line, either."

'Hustling Little Husker' Sparkles Like Champ

"Boy, I've waited a long time, but I finally made it." Thus, a grinning Larry Wachholtz savored the pleasure of a 72-yard punt return TD for the littlest Cornhusker who last year led the nation in that department until the final game of the season. He wound up second, earning All Big 8 and second team All America recognition.

This year the 5-8, 166-pound senior from North Platte is a gold-plated All-America candidate, and he sparkled like a champion against the Goliath-sized Utah State Aggies.

With 39 seconds left in the third quarter, and the score tied 7-7—with Nebraska just blowing a scoring chance from the two-yard line and in real need of a booster shot—Wachholtz literally blasted a 39-yard field goal to put the Huskers ahead.

Nebraska's other Black Shirt sensation, middle guard Wayne Meylan, tore through to block an Aggie punt after Wachholtz' career-best field goal had eased the tension a bit. And Meylan's effort set up a cushion TD.

But it was Wachholtz who supplied the coup d'grace with his dramatic dash with an Aggie punt. The Huskers' mighty mite is averaging 16.6 per return, compared to the 14.5 mark he posted in 1965.

"I finally got that son-of-a-gun," he exclaimed as he walked off the field, just before a mob of youngsters besieged him for autographs. "It was one I wanted for a long time and I finally got it."

Wachholtz, who capped his great day by also intercepting two passes and breaking up several others, almost went the distance against Wisconsin and Colorado last year (both long jaunts set up TDs), but he was never able to log the final yards.

"When I caught the punt, I thought there were two guys right on top of me," Larry said. "But the next thing I knew, they were wiped out by our guys who threw some real fine blocks. After that, I was in the clear for about 20 yards, than I saw some more white shirts to one side and I cut to the other side. I don't think anyone ever touched me."

Nobody did—that is, until his teammates mobbed him after the hustling little Husker finally did "it."

NCAA Test Is Required

A meeting for all men interested in participating in intercollegiate athletics at Nebraska during the 1966-67 academic year will be held, Monday, October 3rd in the south balcony of the Nebraska Coliseum. The time will be 4:30 p.m.; coaches will be present.

The purpose of the meeting will be to acquaint all potential athletes with the new 1.6 predictability test being enforced this year by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The tests are used to determine whether or not a student is capable of attaining a 1.6 grade average on the four point scale.

A student's high school record is used in conjunction with the test to determine eligibility for athletics.

The new ruling by the NCAA makes it mandatory that all athletes prove themselves academically by taking this test before they are allowed to begin practice for an intercollegiate sport.

The two tests that will be used are the ACT and SAT. If students have already taken one of these tests it will be necessary for them to attend the meeting and inform the coaches so that their test records can be checked.

The shake-down season for the team statistical rankings in the Big Eight Conference is almost over and the perennial leaders have been relegated to the lower grades as the time for non-conference experimentation ends.

Kansas, Oklahoma, and Kansas State have been able to revitalize their offenses to move out of the depths. Quite unfamiliar in their current roles are Nebraska, Missouri, and Colorado. All three, the top three of last year, are listed below the fold in rushing.

Only Nebraska, with the best balance in the yard-producing race, stayed with the first division in total offense, mainly on the strength of the Bob Churchich-led passing attack, which paces the league.

Last Week's Results: OKLAHOMA 33, IOWA STATE 11; COLORADO 13, Baylor 7; KANSAS 35, Arizona 13; MISSOURI 21, Illinois 14; NEBRASKA 28, Utah State 7; New Mexico 28, KANSAS STATE 8.
