

Denney, Meyer Speak To Young Republicans

A tax deduction and federal grants to support Nebraska education were advocated by Congressional candidate Robert Denney at University Young Republicans Thursday night.

"We're going to lose our students as well as the potential industries unless we spend more on education," Denney said.

The GOP candidate advocated direct federal grants to be distributed by the state and local governments. Denney promoted the aid and assistance of the federal government rather than its direct control.

Denney also said that he favored an income tax deduction for parents who spend more than $600 dollars on their children's college education.

Denney further proposed a deduction in taxes for businesses who provide on-the-job training for youth. He said that this would reduce the training burden of the government as well as the expense.

Pointing to the University's record enrollment and recent budget requests, Denney said that these were indications of problems that have to be solved.

Denney mentioned the pending Congressional Resource Distribution act, under which two per cent of each state's tax payments to the federal government would be returned to the state. An additional two per cent would be returned each year until ten per cent was being redistributed.

The candidate said that this fits in with his philosophy on government and returning to the states the jurisdiction over money expenditures.

Rather than speaking exclusively on the role of government in education, Denney said that he felt that the students as Young Republic-

WILL I PASS? ... The Ouija Board answers coeds' questions.

'Tell Me Ouija' ... Found: 'A Cure For Curiosity'

In a darkened room of Selleck Quadrangle, two coeds face each other.

Their hands move across a board in their laps as they mumble, "Tell me Ouija, will I pass art?"

Whether it's prophesying the Homecoming game score or predicting the wedding date, at least two coeds at the University have found the Ouija board a useful item.

The Mystifying Oracle, for many years a part of the mystic scene, has been putting in recent appearances on campus at sorority houses and dormitories. Some students laugh at Ouija's predictions, but others remain baffled awe as their leisurely game spells out death and marriage as it is "written in the stars."

The coeds of Selleck are just two of a host of University students who have discovered a cure for curiosity in the Ouija board.

"No, I don't really believe in Ouija, but it makes an interesting evening," said one of the second-floor Selleck residents.

A typically interesting evening starts at 11 p.m. and lasts beyond the intended ten minutes until long past midnight, the coed explained.

As people drift in and out of the room, each with questions that must be answered, the two ouija operators sit entranced, taking time out to quench their own curiosity with a few personal questions about "faithful boyfriends."

Attesting to the accuracy of their oracle, the coeds stated that Ouija had answered many questions correctly concerning home addresses and the number of people in a certain family.

On the other hand, one of the girls pouted that she had not received a letter from her guy as the Ouija board had promised.

"There is nothing scientific about it. We don't usually test Ouija for accuracy," noted the Selleck resident.

She continued saying that when an obvious test of Ouija's powers was being conducted, the board would make "smart," remarks and give ambiguous answers.

"It has a will of its own," she explained.

According to the two girls, Ouija responds better under certain circumstances. On nights before a big test, or the day a paper is due, Ouija will spout amazing answers to keep the operators busy until all hours, while forsaking homework.

"As much as we like Ouija, we may be forced to give our board away. At this rate I'll never get an A in art, despite Ouija's prophecy," lamented the coed.

Editorial Proposal To Spark Interest

The problem of developing interest among students in the University's proposed budget was the main topic of discussion in Wednesday's meeting of the ASUN legislative Liaison and Research Committee.

Bob Tucker, presented the idea of an editorial stating the students' point of view being printed in Lincoln newspapers.

He said that he had heard a recent editorial on radio station KFJR which called for the passage of the entire budget by the Legislature.

"We could look into the possibility of getting it repeated and in getting other radio stations in the area to broadcast similar ones," Tucker suggested.

Curt Bromm, committee chairman, agreed with Tucker, stating that this could be used as a device "to build interest among the students who could in turn sell the budget to others."

Rick Mann, who asked to speak before the meeting, presented a three point plan to develop student interest in the University and in the quality of the educational opportunities presented.

"If the students don't express a desire for the passage of the budget the legislature is going to say 'why not let the students pay more for their education because they don't care,'" Mann said.

His three point plan called for the students to send a petition to the legislature next year, telling why they think the budget should be passed. In addition, students would be asked to sign a letter which would be sent to the legislators.

"If we could get all 17,000 students to sign letters, we could get the attention of the legislature by dumping them on a desk in the Unicameral," he said.

Phil Bowen, co-chairman of the committee in charge of the liaison with the legislators, said that plans are being confirmed for the writing of senators and inviting them to come to the campus.

"Legislators are in Lincoln, off and on, to attend legislative committee meetings. We plan on having living units invite them to dinner while they are in Lincoln," Bowen explained.

He stated that most state senators prefer an informal meeting with students, with a chance to talk personally with the students, as opposed to a tour of the University campus and then attending a formal meeting.

Bromm asked the committee to "brainstorm" and develop an effective slogan to use in their campaign. Co-chairman Marv Almy suggested the passage of the proposed budget in order to make "a University our football team can be proud of."
