

Pfiefer To Describe Convocations' Problem

An explanation of the actions of the Faculty Committee on Convocations will be presented to the Student Senate Wednesday afternoon by Senator Ron Pfiefer.

He said that he would explain where the committee stands and how they operate in obtaining speakers to come to the University.

"I will continue to speak before the Senate throughout the year explaining the progress of the committee toward obtaining speakers," Pfiefer explained.

Pfiefer added that Larry Grossman, chairman of the Union's Talks and Topics Committee, will be available to further explain to the Senate the convocations problem.

Originally, according to Roger Doerr, vice president of ASUN, a motion had been planned asking that the Senate either approve or disapprove the carrying of banners during the half-times of University football games.

After talking with University Athletic Director Tippy Dye, who had originally requested the action, Pfiefer stated that it was agreed that the Senate and the Athletic Department would watch what happens this weekend, and then decide on any action next week.

Senator Liz Aitken is expected to make a motion asking that the Senate approve the organization of a Rules Committee.

Upon Senate approval of the committee, Senator John Gerlach, whose idea it was to create such a committee, will become its chairman. Serving with him will be Senators Dave Snyder and Miss Aitken.

The purpose of the committee will be to decide on special problems that come up in Senate meetings, but are not covered in Robert's Rules, according to Doerr.

Doerr expects a motion asking that the date for organizations to comply with the uniform ASUN regulations for their constitutions be moved from Nov. 1 to Apr. 1.

He explained that this is necessary because the Student Activities Office doesn't have any record of the officers of some of the organizations.

"We can't expect then to comply with the rules when we haven't been able to contact them and explain the rules," Doerr declared.

"Student Court decided in a case last year, that the Student Senate has the power to adopt new rules for all campus organizations which must be complied with," he stated.

"The new regulations, which the Senate approved last March, are not much different from the present constitutions of most of the groups, except for the requirement that the constitutions provide for initiative, referendum, and recall."

Action is not expected soon on filling the Senate vacancy resulting from the resignation of Don Voss from the Senate. He was forced to resign because of a class conflict with the

CFPD Continues Work On Draft Of Constitution

A proposal to include University faculty in general membership of the Campus Freedom Democratic Party (CFDP) was postponed for future discussion and vote.

The proposal was made at the CFDP meeting Tuesday during a discussion of the proposed constitution of the campus political party.

"This is a question of how students relate to faculty. I feel that the proposal would instrument a co-ordinating effort between the two," stated Maggie Young who made the faculty membership proposal.

Replying that CFDP is a student political party working within ASUN, Frank McClanahan stated his opposition to the proposal, because only students can vote in ASUN elections.

Opinions of the membership seemed equally divided on the question as the proposal was delayed for future study.

Standing committees of the CFDP were approved in the proposed constitution after a motion to strike a committee on the Bill of Rights from the constitution. This was done to eliminate the work of a committee that would duplicate ASUN duties upon passage in the Senate of a student bill of rights, according to Rand Prier.

NU-Meds To See Hospital Facility

University NU-Meds will take a field trip to St. Elizabeth's hospital Wednesday night, according to Gail Burbridge.

Burbridge said that the members will hear pathologist Dr. John Porterfield speak and afterwards examine some of the latest in radiology equipment at the hospital.

Big Budget: Budget Answer

December; to the Legislature's nine-member budget committee and to the Legislature itself.

"The budget committee will provide the funds they believe to be adequate to meet the needs of the University; it's up to the University how they convince that committee," Hugo Srb, clerk of the Legislature said.

Convince Taxpayers

The University must also take its case to the taxpayers, if it expects to obtain a good portion of its budget request, agreed Terry Schaaf, ASUN president, and Herman.

"It strikes me that the University needs to do a better job of informing the whole state of the problems," Herman said.

"Somebody in the administration should certainly take it upon himself to sell the budget and the University to the state," Schaaf declared.

"No evidence has yet been shown that they (administration) intend to make a concentrated effort to sell the University to the taxpayers. I certainly hope we'll be able to work together in formulating some sort of plan," the ASUN president continued.

"I just don't think this effort has been made in the past," he said.

While noting that the University does have a definite responsibility to present the problems of the school to the state, Mrs. Orme said, "I don't see any need at all for the University Regents and the administration to get down on their knees before the Legislature."

Not On Sidelines

Although the administration has not yet announced any definite campaign to present the budget picture to the taxpayers and the Legislature, a program is in the making, according to George Round, director of University public relations.

"We're not sitting on the sidelines. The budget has not gone undefended in the past and will not go undefended now," Round said.

Round said the administration has had similar programs but did not state whether this year's program would be more intensive. "The needs are greater," he observed. The program will include talks around the state by top administrators and a "more active" role for the Regents, Round said.

The University's job of convincing the state of its need "is much more difficult this year" because of the increased request, Herman said.

Hardin said he hopes the Legislature will "take time to examine our budget."

"I feel certain they will study it seriously and will recognize our needs," Hardin said.
