

Present Slum Is Building Location

There is room for expansion of the Greek system within the land under consideration by the University for future purchases, according to George Hancock, land purchasing agent for the University.

Hancock expressed these views at the IFC meeting Wednesday evening. He stated that the land chosen by Delta Sigma Phi and Beta Sigma Psi fraternities is the "best location for fraternity housing that can be found in Lincoln."

"I came to this conclusion after studying future growth patterns of both the city and the University. The present objection that this land is in a slum will not last long. Already, 19 of the 20 houses purchased by the University in that area have been demolished," he declared.

Hancock stated that no University buildings are planned for this cleared area at the present time. However it will probably be utilized for athletic and intramural fields and for needed parking lots.

He recommended that any fraternities or sororities, who are considering moving into the new area, should plan on moving into the block with Delta Sigma Phi and Beta Sigma Psi.

"I recommend this because the city of Lincoln is interested in land on the block and this would restrict their acquisition of land on the block," he stated.

Jerry Olson, scholarship chairman, reported on the outcome of the waiver system passed by IFC last March. This system would allow fraternities to pledge two men per semester with an average below 2.0 or from the lower half of their high school classes.

Out of 31 individuals who were pledged under this system, Olson stated that 12 made a 2.0 average or better. The grades ranged from 6.0 to 2.672.

Olson said that the results of those men pledged this year who were in the lower half of their graduating class will help to evaluate the waiver system more fully.

McConnell Studies Economics Teaching By Closed Circuit TV

By Nancy Hendrickson Senior Staff Writer

The effectiveness of teaching by closed circuit television is being measured in an experimental study by Dr. C. R. McConnell, professor of economics.

The results of the study will influence the future decision as to how principles of economics will be taught at the University, McConnell said.

For the last two years Economics 11 has been taught by taped lectures on television sets.

This semester the course is being taught by four different means. McConnell himself teaches a small class of 30 students. He also teaches a large class of 150 students.

Ten sections of sixty students each are taught by closed circuit television lectures taped by McConnell. Three sections of 45 students each are taught by graduate assistants.

Students for the different sections were selected at random, McConnell said.

The small live section taught by McConnell will be the control group, and each student from the three other groups will be matched with one of the thirty on the basis of college affiliation, cumulative grade average and number of hours earned.

The matched students will eliminate bias and any difference in performance will be attributed to the way they were instructed, he said.

Comparisons will measure the performance and attitudes of the four groups of 30 students.

Performance will be measured by objective exams. The internal part of the exam, which is written by McConnell, will contain factual, conceptual and analytical questions.

The external part is a compilation of questions from a test of economic understanding prepared by a college research board and a college level test by the joint council on economic education.

An objective questionnaire at the end of the semester will measure the students' attitudes toward the discipline and toward the instructional media.

The University has one of the most progressive closed circuit operations and the findings of the experiment will be of interest to other departments as well as other schools, McConnell said.

To make closed circuit TV worthwhile it must be viewed by 350 or more students, he added.

Saving in staff cost and time from the use of instruction by TV is tremendous, he said. But it will only be continued if the course is taught just as effectively as in the live sections and attitudes are not otherwise worse.

Lab Theatre Schedules Auditions For Comedies

Twenty-four parts are available for auditions in the Laboratory Theatre's first bill of six comedies this semester.

Auditions for the parts will be held in room 201 of the Temple Building on Sunday at 7 p.m. and on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at 3:30 p.m.

"We are interested in seeing new people who do not necessarily have to be experienced to read for the part," stated Dr. Dallas Williams, head of the University speech department.

The six authors of the plays represent a "covering of the waterfront," according to Williams, as German, English, French, American and Italian works will be represented in the bill of plays.

All plays will be directed by students of advanced directing classes, and will be produced before Thanksgiving vacation for the public.

The plays are all comedies, but represent a variety of comedy techniques.

The Knack, by Ann Jellicoe, will be directed by Phyllis Knipping. Edward Albee's "The Zoo Story" is under the direction of John Holms.

A one-act play by George Bernard Shaw, "The Man of Destiny", will be directed by James Sellmeyer. "Architruc", source of the movie "Once Upon a Mattress", is by Robert Pinzel and will be directed by Jean MacLaren.

Dan Steadman has been named director of Peter Shaffer's "The Private Ear." "The Mistress of the Inn" by Carlo Goldoni, will be directed by Stephen A. Gaines.

Williams stated that the plays demand a variety of talents and present a wide range of form, style and language.

He emphasized that any faculty member or student may participate in the tryouts. Scripts may be picked up at the audition.
