ODDS BODKINS Foreign Student Group To Co-Exist With PTP

The International Student Association of Nebraska (NIA) has recently been formed to act as a coordinating body for all foreign student activities on campus.

According to Ashok Davar, NIA co-chairman, the group is to act as a unifying body for activities and in no way is to take the place of the existing foreign student groups.

Joel Swanson, People to People president, at a previous meeting, has said he would be willing to dissolve People-to-People if the move would in any way help to unify the efforts of the two groups.

Davar said this was not the intention of NIA and that NIA and People-to-People should be able to function efficiently as separate and distinct bodies.

People-to-People is basically a group of American students attempting to assist foreign students while NIA is a group of foreign students functioning among themselves.

Both groups willingly accept and encourage American and foreign students to join the organizations.

Davar said that during the Thanksgiving vacation he was in Washington and contacted several foreign ambassadors about the possibility of appearing at the University in the near future. He is hopeful several of his invitations will be accepted.

Davar noted that students benefit from NIA because they learn the customs of foreign countries. They also make acquaintances who will be valuable contacts in countries they may visit.

The new officers of Nebraska International Association are: Ashok Davar, foreign co-chairman; Darrel Diedrichs, American co-chairman; Dele Aborunrin, treasurer; Gay Gustafsen, secretary; Trinidad Balagtas, Bashir Ahmad, Jeanne Chen, Mohi det Atwal, executive committee.

Winters: Teacher Role 'Sculptor Of Humans'

Teachers must teach their students to be creative cooperators rather than clever competitors to help the world advance, Dr. Carl Winters told an all-Teachers College convocation sponsored by Mu Epsilon Nu Wednesday.

He termed teaching "one of the two most glorious professions," because teachers, like ministers, work to help people grow. They take a person from where he is to where he ought to be, Winters said.

He defined a teacher as a "human sculptor whose business it is to mold the living clay."

Dr. Winters, a minister in the First Baptist Church for forty years, said that teachers and ministers have the same problems and satisfactions.

"Life is exciting for those who are in the business of making people better, and this is the teaching profession," he noted.

Quoting Albert Schweitzer, whom he met on one of his three trips around the world, Winters commented that example is the only important thing about teaching.

"One example is worth a thousand arguments," he said.

The "glory road" of teaching is also a knowledge road, he added.

"This is the world in which knowledge is king and the prizes are king-sized. In today's world, it is dangerous to be dumb," he stated.

In addition to knowledge, a teacher must possess character, he said.

"We must teach more than pure knowledge. We must be a guide into unborn tomorrows," he added.
