

Letter Cites Miss Girard For Service

A letter nominating Miss Madeline Girard for Outstanding Nebraskan has been received citing 18 years of service to "the University and the Greek system as Panhellenic adviser on a volunteer basis."

Letters will be accepted in the Daily Nebraskan office until noon Wednesday, two "Outstanding Nebraskans," one student and one faculty member, will be named in Friday's issue of the paper.

Other nominations to date include Polly Rhynalds, Cathie Shattuck, Gary Larsen, Dr. Peter Wolfe and Dr. Floyd Hoover.

Miss Girard, the letter continued, has chosen "to take a personal interest in all phases of campus life" and has directed five sororities in colonization on the campus.

In the time she has been here, the letter states, Panhellenic has established scholarship, social and activities councils and sorority membership has grown from 800 to 1,500.

"She was influential in getting the Dean's Assistance Fund established for assistance to any student who comes into unexpected financial crisis and an emergency help to meet an emergency," the letter says.

In addition, the nomination continues, Miss Girard "established a philanthropic award which bears her name. The Award is presented to the living unit which does the most for charity each year on Ivy Day."

"Perhaps one of the greatest indicators of Miss Girard's abilities is the fact that under her guidance, Panhellenic at the University was awarded the first Leland award for the most outstanding campus Panhellenic, the letter notes.

The letter concludes that it is only "fitting that Miss Girard receive the award for Outstanding Nebraskan in recognition of her continued and unselfish service to the University community."

FORMER KENNEDY AIDE . . . and SAM alum, Sam White talked with old friends Sunday after being named Sigma Alpha Mu "Man of the Year."

SAM Alum Lee White Returns, Views Years As Kennedy Aide

By John Fryar
Junior Staff Writer

University alumnus Lee White, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, visited both his son and the University Sunday as the Sigma Alpha Mu "Man of the Year."

White, 43, was graduated in Engineering in 1948 and from the law college in 1950. His son Bruce is a freshman Sigma Alpha Mu pledge.

Before he began his press March, White was an adviser to Presidents Johnson and Kennedy.

First Contact
White said that his first contact with the Kennedy organization resulted from his friendship with law school classmate Ted Sorensen. White was working as a lawyer for the Tennessee Valley Authority in Knoxville, Tennessee, when Sorensen recommended that he talk to then Senator Kennedy. He later worked as a Legislative assistant to the late President.

He observed that while the University is currently having budgetary problems in obtaining legislative appropriations, the situation was the same while he was in college. He predicted that such financial problems would still be present after another quarter-century.

White noted, however, that the enrollment now is near 17,000 and was only 5 to 6,000 while he was in college. He said that it was "tough to generalize" on the results of the recent elections, but admitted that the Republicans had made "tremendous gains" in the House, Senate and key governorships.

Discounts RFK
White discounted Senator Robert Kennedy's presidential chances in 1968, adding that Kennedy himself had noted that a party traditionally renominates an incumbent President.

He said that Sen. Kennedy would be in the "top of the league in 1972" by virtue of his Senatorial position, but stated that the Kennedy family knows from personal experience not to depend on long-range plans.

White partially attributed the defeat of his personal friend Phillip Sorensen in Nebraska's gubernatorial race to the reaction of voters against having such a young man in office.

Conservatism
He said that Nebraska's congressional delegation was regarded in Washington as representing the conservatism of the state. He said that defeated Democratic Congressman Clair Callan had made an "impressive" showing in the office.

White stated that it was difficult to compare the "living President with the martyred one," and pointed out that both were successful politicians. He said that Johnson may have combined his legislative skills and a "national feeling of guilt" to enact many of Kennedy's bogged-down programs.

Even though many Nebraska graduates get "good jobs," White said that it was "discouraging" to see so many University graduates leave the state. He said that only three of his classmates who started in 1941, still live in Nebraska.

He said that although he disagreed with the "idea attributed to Ted Sorensen that 'Nebraska is a state to move away from,' he thought Sorensen was using the statement as a "literary device."

Mobile Population
White said that with the national "mobile population," Nebraska is probably receiving its share of technical and commercial personnel from other states.

White chatted with old friends at the Sigma Alpha Mu reception, met the sons of friends and classmates and browsed through reminders of his own pledgeship. He said he was "jolted" by the realization that his son was this age while he himself could vividly remember college days.

He stated that the "years had been kind" and this was not a "painful" reunion as many sometimes are.

'Prof' Evaluation Book To Be Revised, Bigger

Next year's faculty evaluation booklet will be bigger and will be more of a complete aid to the students and instructors, according to Tom Morgan, chairman of the Faculty Evaluation committee.

"We are hoping to include 300 teachers in next year's booklet, but it is hard to tell at this time whether this will be a maximum, a minimum, or what," Morgan stated. "This year the overall response was favorable and both faculty and students see the value in the booklet."

The committee has revised the questionnaire to contain 21 multiple-choice questions. Morgan said that the evaluation will be basically the same, but that more information will be included, such as the number of quizzes and tests given and whether they come from the instructor's lectures or from the textbook.

"The questionnaire has been improved to bring out more information so that the student can make a better decision," Morgan explained.

The question in last year's booklet pertaining to whom the student would recommend taking the course has been eliminated, according to Morgan.

"We will put the facts about the course before the student and let him make his own decision. This move will also erase some of the misuse of the booklet by the students and the misinterpretation of it by outsiders," he stressed.

Many of this year's 119 evaluated teachers will be re-evaluated this year, Morgan said, because the new questionnaire will show different things about the teacher. In addition, it will help provide a more fair evaluation.

Morgan said that the second book will be out next fall, in time for second semester registration. This will enable the committee to evaluate teachers during this semester's and next semester's dead week.

"The booklet will therefore be applicable next year to both second semester of next year and the following first semester courses," he stated.

Morgan said that members of his committee have contacted the deans of various colleges to explain what they are doing and to ask their permission to evaluate teachers within the colleges.

"By this, we hoped to eliminate some of the problems that we had last year with some dean's disapproval of teachers in their college being evaluated. In addition, we felt this would establish a working relationship with the deans," he said.

The colleges in which the teachers will be evaluated next semester are Business Administration, Arts and Sciences (including journalism), Teachers, and Agriculture and Home Economics.

Morgan said that Engineering and Architecture declined to participate because they presently have an evaluation system of their own among their teachers and want to develop it before taking on another form.

The committee is presently drafting a letter which will go to 600 instructors next week explaining the booklet and the procedures which will be followed this year.

Morgan said that the questionnaires will be mailed to the instructors through the campus mail. The questionnaires will be sent before dead week, leaving the choice of which class will do the evaluating up to the instructor himself.

Ag Specialist Stresses Values From Activities

Specialists in 25 fields related to agriculture presented seminars to students from the College of Agriculture and Home Economics at the sixth annual Professional Opportunities Conference on East Campus Dec. 8.

The conference was sponsored jointly by the East Campus Faculty Committee on Convocations and the Ag Exec Board.

In an opening speech before an audience of approximately 300, T. W. Wendell of the industrial relations department of Swift and Co. told students what companies look for in hiring employees. He stressed the importance of college activities because working in them shows employers that a person can communicate with people.

The Ag Exec Board also presented its first annual Outstanding Professor Award to Howard Wiegars, assistant professor of poultry science of the Poultry Science Department.

Following the general assembly, students attended seminars in the three of 25 possible fields they had selected ahead of time.

These smaller seminars were conducted rather like classes, according to Dave Snyder, chairman of the Ag Exec Board. Each seminar lasted approximately 50 minutes of which 40 minutes might be lecture and 10 minutes set aside for questions.

Each specialist was accompanied by a faculty member who introduced him and served as host.

Presentations included such fields as agricultural chemicals, dairy technology, farm credit, farm and ranch management, feed industry, food and meat technology and U.S. Forest Service.

Participants in the conferences included: representatives from Phillips Petroleum Co., Shell Chemical Co. Agri-Research Inc., J. C. Robinson Seed Co., Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Omaha, Midwest Land Co., Glenn Kreuschler, Farm editor for the Lincoln Journal, and Star D. E. Hutchinson of the State Soil Conservation Service and Ambrose Burkhardt of the U.S. Forest Service.

Classes on East Campus were dismissed so all students could participate. Dr. Charles Adams, associate professor of Animal Science was chairman of the conference. Other committee members included: Dr. James G. Kendrick, associate Professor of Ag Economics Dr. John J. Sulek, associate professor Ag Chuck Pohlman, Engineering, Les Nelson a members of the Ag Exec Board.

Ag Exec Chooses Wiegars Top Prof

The Ag Exec Board presented its first annual Outstanding Professor Award to Howard Wiegars of the Poultry Science Department at the sixth annual Conference Dec. 8.

The outstanding professor, selection is based on the "student point of view," according to Dave Snyder, chairman of the Ag Exec Board.

The committee considers the contribution that the professor makes outside the classroom and how well he relates to students in their total education outside his particular field, Snyder added.

Each East Campus organization submitted names of outstanding teachers in their areas. The Ag Exec Board reviewed the qualifications and made their selection, Snyder said.

Wiegars was presented a plaque and will have his name inscribed on a larger plaque which will hang in the C. Y. Thompson Library.

The Ag Exec Board earlier presented a similar award to Miss Lorraine Brandt, assistant professor of family economics and management.

Liquor Control Commission May Issue Licenses Early

Liquor-by-the-drink licenses could be issued in Lincoln earlier than previously expected.

Francis Robinson, State Liquor Control Commission chairman, has not denied the possibility that the commission may begin issuing the licenses this week.

Liquor-by-the-drink was approved by Lincoln voters in the Nov. 8 election. The licenses provide for the sale of liquor and beer, both on and off sale, at one location.

Under state law, the commission can legally start taking action on the licenses approved by the City Council Tuesday at 5 p.m.

Robinson said persons have until 5 p.m. Monday to file protests. If no protests are filed the commission will follow the proper procedure.

Robinson said that he did not previously state that no licenses would be issued until after the first of the year.

"What I said was we will not conduct any hearings until after the first of the year," he said.

The commission holds hearings on a license when protests are filed or the local governing body recommends denial of an application.

The City Council approved six of the first ten applications for liquor-by-the-drink. Class C licenses, last Monday on the condition that the owners sign an agreement forfeiting their right to sell package liquor and beer.

Robinson said he had no comment to make on the commission's reaction to the Council's move. Attorneys for four of the applicants immediately drew up an amendment to the agreement stating that it would be "null and void" if the state body reversed the council's decision.

Councilman John Mason and City Attorney Ralph Nelson also questioned the legality of the council's action.

Council member Mrs. Helen Boosalis said the council took the action because, "We want good op-
