Basketball Turnout Near 2,300 . . .

Intramural Policy: Playing Better Than Wins sports PAGE

A total of 584 games between 144 teams (which means some 2,300 men) explains the statistical complications that face Joel Meier, intramural sports director, in operating the men's basketball program

Meier administrates his office under the philosophy that playing is more important than winning.

Because of this, Meier uses a round robin system of league play and a double elimination policy in the basketball program in order to allow the maximum of participation.
"Competition is most desirable in intramurals, not just determining the best team," Meier noted.

But the Physical Education building quarters are now crowded with competi-

"We're right at maximum now," aded Meier,
"I don't see how we could run the same type of tournament in the future with any more teams added. We run the courts from five to closing time at 10:30 p.m. every day."

Under these circumstances Meier said, "we have to cut back on he type of tournament we

Cutting back would mean such alternatives as only allowing the top two teams from each league into the tournament instead of the present four. Another pos-

Big Eight Mat Meets Show Nation's Best

If you want a good pre-view of the top teams in the national college wrestling tournament, catch the Big Eight meet at Oklahoma this weekend.

Chances are that the finish at the conference tournament at Norman will prove some of the best ma-terial headed for the na-tionals, March 23-25, at Kent State.

In 1966, for example, Oklahoma State, Oklahoma and Iowa State were onetwo-three in the Big Eight meet. At nationals, Oklahoma State was again the winner and Iowa State displaced Oklahoma for the runner-up spot. Seeks Seventh Oklahoma State is after its seventh straight Big Eight wrestling championship this year, but this is not the longest winning skein in the conference's history for the sport. Oklahoma rolled to eight straight, beginning in 1950. Iowa State ended that string in 1958.

In the 33 years of the wrestling championships, Oklahoma has won 16 of the team trophies, while Oklahoma State has seven and Iowa State six. Kansas State has won three times and Nebraska once.

Strong Argument Oklahoma has some strong arguments to use against the Cowboys—on paper, at least. The Sooners have defeated both Oklahoma State and Iowa State in duals this year, and Oklahoma may be stronger in being able to field a full team.

Last season, when O-State won with a 97-92 margin over Oklahoma, Sooner coach Tommy Evans found himself one short of the 11-man contingent.

"We didn't even have a 115-pounder last year." Evans said, "and that cost us seven or eight points Returning Scorers Oklahoma State returns wrestlers who scored 46 points in the 1966 conference meet. Oklahoma has 39 points back, followed by Iowa State 38, Colorado 20, Nebraska 9, Kansas State 7 and Missouri 4.

Of these returning scorers, five are conference champions. Two of the champs belong to Okla-homa State, two to Okla-homa and the other to Iowa Sooner Bryan Rice, 15-1 for the season in the 123pound division, has decisions over Tom Green of Oklahoma State, Gary Wallman of Iowa State and Dell Rhodes of Colorado.

OSU's Davis Oklahoma State's Gene Davis, Big Eight and NCAA 137 champion last season. is wrestling undefeated in 145 (6-0) and 152 (5-0).

Cowboy Jim Rogers, the 145 winner in the Big Eight last season, has moved up to the 152 division, where he is 5-2. One of his losses came to Oklahoma's Wayne Wells, the defending 152 Big Eight titlist.

Options:

Vic Marcucci Iowa State's Vic Marcucci, first in the conference and second in the NCAA in 160 for 1966, is 15-2 in the 167 division, his only Big Eight loss coming to Roger Mickish of Oklahoma.

Only the Oklahoma pair, Rice and Wells, appear to be going back to the weights in which they won last year.

Oklahoma Strong Oklahoma's Evans thinks he has four strong title contenders and two other possibilities. He lists Rice, Dickie Haxel at 137, Wells and Roger Mickish at 167 as Oklahoma's ringleaders and also tabs Cleo McGlory at 160 and Granville Liggins at heavyweight as possible champs.

Wells must contend in the tournament's strongest weight. In addition to Rogers. Iowa State's Dale Bahr, 1966 NCAA runnerup at 145, and Colorado's Conard Metcalf, owner of a 10-3 record, are entered.

OSU Favorites Oklahoma State favorites appear to be Davis at 145 and Fred Fozzard at 177 with Jerry Stone at 160 and heavyweight Bruce Wilhelm also excellent prospects.

Iowa State contenders are Bahr at 152, unbeaten Reg Wicks at 160, Marcucci 177, Don Buzzard at 191 and unbeaten Ted Tuinstra at heavyweight.

Colorado, with potential winners Dell Rhodes at 115, Jim Hanson at 130 and Bob Justice at 177, is given the best chance for fourth, but does not have the balance to penetrate the top three.

Hanson Strong

At 130, Jim Hanson of Colorado looks strongest, with an unblemished season record of 13-0. He was third in the weight in the 1965 Big Eight meet.

Hanson's victories in-clude an 8-1 decision ever Nebraska's Jerry Langdon. Oklahoma's Dave Mc-Guire, 11-5-1 for the year, is also a strong bidder at the 130 spot. He lost an 8-3 decision to Hanson in a dual this season.
