

JOHNNY CARSON . . . meets with the housemother and members of his college fraternity, Phi Gamma Delta, on a visit to Nebraska during which he hosted Nebraska's Show of the Century.

Alumnus Johnny Carson Re-Visits Phi Gamma Delta

Contrary to various news reports stating that he could not appear, Johnny Carson returned to the University campus Sunday and visited his collegiate home, Phi Gamma Delta fraternity.

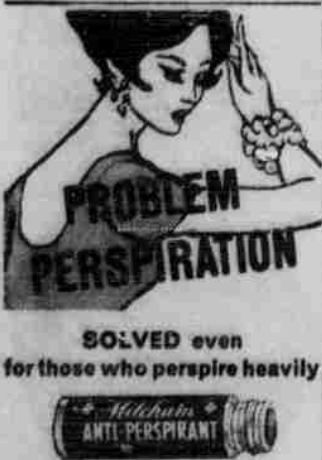

Obviously refreshed because of a vacation from his job on account of the television announcers' strike, Carson traded stories with both graduates and undergraduates.

The increasing size of the University campus makes jurisdiction over all women students by the AWS Court an "impossible task," according to Andrea Warren, former AWS Board member.

In light of this fact, the residents and staff of Sandoz Hall have established a proposed charter of the Sandoz Hall AWS Court.

If the proposed charter is accepted by the AWS Board, the court will go into effect, and if it proves to be successful, the plan will be expanded to cover all houses and dorms.

A & S Candidates Give Views

Jump From Page 3, Col. 8 for himself.

He added he has had two years of experiences with the ASUN associates.

Dormitory Officer
As a past dormitory officer, Wayne Morton said he has "had a great deal of experience in student government."

Morton added he is well informed on the ASUN policies and the need for changes.

Expressing a willingness to "spend as much time as possible" with senatorial duties, Ann Musselman said the University "can be made a better place."

Better Coordination
Better coordination between the representatives and the Senate can be reached she said. A senator "I would help students take more interest in the University."

Incumbent Senator Nesha Neumeister said her past record in the Senate qualifies her for re-election.

She said if she were re-elected she would expand the English summer reading course she introduced this year, and help establish a senior advisor system to aid or replace faculty advisors.

Fatalistic Attitude
Another incumbent senator Sue Phelps said the "fatalistic attitude about students not being able to better the University has crippled student government in the past."

This attitude is changing, however, she said, as the Senate has tried to deal with "problems of students' rights and quality education." She added that her experience would be vital in Senate because of the "complexity of the issues" next year.

Maintaining that the "future effectiveness of ASUN is at stake" in the upcoming elections, Randy Prier said "strong and effective persons" are needed in ASUN.

Must Communicate
To be an effective senator, he commented, one has to communicate with his constituents. If he is elected, Prier said he would introduce legislation that would demand that "senators go back to their constituents" for their opinions.

Walt Radcliffe said he does not want to become a senator to "further himself" but wants to "represent the student."

He added that if any students "came to me with a suggestion of any merit, I would see it was presented on the Senate floor."

Gap Exists
Commenting the "major problem facing ASUN is the gap between administrators, faculty and the student body, Vicki Schick said no one working alone is in a position to close this gap but a unified ASUN possesses great potential."

Miss Schick stresses that understanding "is the key to making any policy effective and that very few students 'actually understand' issues such as the Bill of Rights and the housing policies."

Mark Schreiber said that he has had experience in the Senate working on committees and attending the ASUN meetings.

Commenting on the Bill of Rights, he said the bill's views "must be used with discretion. Some people have over-extended it beyond what it was designed."

"ASUN is much too conservative," senatorial candidate Don Sutton said. "There were many things that needed to be done" this year. He added he would show the necessary concern needed for a good senator.

Look Beyond
Diane Theisen said ASUN must have the "vision to look beyond the University to see what is right with what we have and what is wrong before we can improve."

She said she has a larger scope on some issues since she has served as national vice-president of the Catholic Youth Organization. The senate must work "with diversified groups and communicate ideas in order to make an ideal University," she said.

As the editor of the Nebraska Student Government Association newsletter, Vincent Van Zago said he has had contact, not only with news from other campuses, but also with the University.

Social Commitments
Van Zago said there is a "trend for senators to vote on social commitments rather than to consider the issues." He added he would face issues and work to improve the Senate by appointing qualified people to ASUN committees.

Maintaining he has a "progressive outlook needed to recognize the problems of the University, Brent Worms said he has the necessary experience and the desire to work with and for the University students.

The Daily Nebraskan was unable to reach Kathy Augustin, Mark H. Backlund, Janet Gilles, and Bill Mobley, for comment.
