

Tufts Freshmen Choose Student Instructors

Intercollegiate Press Bulletin
 Medford, Mass. — Freshmen at Tufts University will have a choice this year between seminar courses taught by students and seminar courses taught by faculty members.

The students maintain that freshmen learn more when the class leader is "asking them not telling them."

The faculty stresses the hope "that the opportunity for social contact in an intellectual context between faculty members and freshmen will give the student an insight into the lively practice of intellectual endeavor and discovery."

FRIENDLY RIVALRY

The friendly student-faculty rivalry is the result of separate efforts by student members of the Experimental College Board and faculty members of the Committee on Curriculum to provide alternatives to the usual lecture and laboratory courses now offered freshmen.

Students have long maintained that such courses are too impersonal. The seminars will be small group discussions on selected topics.

Student Experimental College Board members who proposed the seminars said they are intended to develop a questioning attitude in freshmen.

VARIETY TEACHING

They are not to teach a set of facts or a particular piece of knowledge, but how to go about acquiring any desired knowledge.

The classes will meet twice a week with one or two upperclass leaders; note taking will not be discouraged, and each freshman will be required to keep a journal for entries at the end of each discussion.

The students, in proposing these seminars, described the freshman year as "a dismal and drudgery-filled experience."

OPEN SEMINARS

The college board chose student-led seminars because "freshmen will open up more with another student than with a professor."

They still have their previous conception of a professor as an infallible source of knowledge, and "the leader is exploring the topics with the students and therefore makes better progress."

The faculty, in proposing their seminars, will begin this September to include a considerably wider variety of courses. The faculty will limit each class to 10 students.

STUDENT BENEFIT

The formal faculty report describes the seminars as "explorations in diverse intellectual areas." In stating reasons for instituting the seminars the report said: "In these seminars the benefits of individual instruction may be realized; independent and analytical thinking will be encouraged; new educational experiences both in areas of study and in type of study will be made available to incoming freshmen; the importance of intensive study as opposed to extensive survey will be emphasized."

"It is believed that faculty-designed and faculty-directed freshman seminars will contribute to satisfying a strongly-felt need among both freshmen and faculty for well-focused and directed investigations in limited areas."

"The course is an entirely new approach to reading and learning. It's most valuable characteristic is the knowledge it gives a student about his own capabilities. It no longer makes all the material we want to read seem so unmanageable—instead, through selection by preview and depth reading of important material, it is possible to accomplish much."

DANIEL W. COCKSON
 STUDENT, UNIVERSITY OF NEBR.
 beginning 517 ending 6667

"Reading Dynamics is an excellent way to improve your present reading potential. It is a truly satisfying way of becoming a more efficient, faster reader. It will increase your desire to read, as you can read the same material you are now reading in less time with less effort. There isn't any limit to the amount you can learn when you apply yourself."

ROBERT JACOBSEN
 STUDENT, UNIVERSITY OF NEBR.
 beginning 270 ending 2927

"If you want to do more reading but hate to start any book that looks too big because it takes too long to read, then take this course."

GERALD K. BUNTING
 STUDENT, UNIVERSITY OF NEBR.
 beginning 276 ending 4615

"The course helps with studying, particularly in covering large amounts of material for reference purposes. It also allows you to cover a subject in depth and gain a further knowledge above what you could normally obtain in a given amount of time."

RAYMOND LEO CURTIS
 STUDENT, UNIVERSITY OF NEBR.
 beginning 330 ending 5000

"After completing the course I can read more and do it in less time. Reading has become a more meaningful and rewarding experience. This course would be beneficial for any high school student, but especially those contemplating college. Not only is it helpful in reading novels and fiction, but also very helpful in studying texts."

JULIE R. HANSON
 STUDENT, UNIVERSITY OF NEBR.
 beginning 347 ending 2857

"It really speeds up ones reading rate and makes reading more enjoyable. It improves comprehension too."

MICHAEL GREEN
 STUDENT, UNIVERSITY OF NEBR.

ATTEND A FREE DEMONSTRATION

What is the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics method? How can Reading Dynamics fully guarantee to at least triple the reading efficiency rate of those taking the course?

These are some of the questions that will be covered at the free one hour demonstrations currently being held by Reading Dynamics as well as a full explanation of the course. A movie will also be shown. No reservations are needed, and you are under no obligation. Save one hour this week to attend one of these demonstrations. Learn how to save hours of reading time . . . and enjoy reading more. Check the demonstration schedule below.
