Dr. William Morgan . . . Albee's Compassion For Society Shown By Play Characterizations

By BARB MARTIN
Junior Staff Writer

"A Delicate Balance," by Edward Albee, is an outstanding drama by one of the country's leading playwrights, according to Dr. William Morgan, director of the Repertory play.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning drama opens Friday at 8 p.m. at Howell Theater. Week-end performances will continue until Dec. 19, alternating with Moliere's "Misanthrope."

Morgan said that Albee has received much unjustified criticism about the play. Several reviewers have indicated that Albee hit a high point with "Virginia Woolf" and since then has steadily deteriorated.

LATE AND SUBTLE

The critics contend that Albee's best play was "Virginia Woolf." When he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for "Delicate Balance," they insisted that it came a year late and was unwarranted. Morgan said that "Virginia Woolf" is flamboyant, while this play is subtle and on a higher level.

The director explained that this indicates the sarcastic detachment which is too common in contemporary critics. It is too easy to condemn a play for one line or even one word. Morgan said.

Morgan added that he considers Albee one of the top three contemporary playwrights and respects him personally as well as professionally.

He described "Delicate Balance" as the best play of the 1967 season. Albee, the director said, shows a great deal of compassion for people and does an excellent job of characterization. Morgan added that the playwright's control of language is superb.

YOUNG AUTHOR

He emphasized that Albee is a young man and did not begin writing until recently. He is still learning and developing his style, and should not be judged as an older, well-established author, according to the director.

Morgan noted that Albee's attitude toward his contemporaries is admirable. His profits have been used to subsidize an organization to

IFC To Vote On Request To Assess

A measure to assess fraternity members $2 each to finance Greek Week was introduced by Greek Week Chairman Ray Novotny at the Interfraternity Council (IFC) meeting Wednesday.

Novotny requested that the measure be passed only if Panhellenic passes a similar proposal.

The motion will be put to vote next week.

"We must have a sound financial basis if we are to make Greek Week a success," Novotny pointed out.

Novotny said he has contacted Panhellenic President Sherri Miller who indicated Panhellenic is interested in considering a similar assessment.

The assessment would yield about $6,000.

IFC also elected Sid Logemann and Doug Peter as University IFC delegates to the national IFC convention.

The convention will be held Nov. 30 through Dec. 2 in New York City.

Olson Quits Education Lands Post

The secretary of the State Board of Educational Lands and Funds resigned Thursday.

John Olson, 33, who has held the post since January, 1965, said in a letter to the board that he intends to enter private business. His resignation will become effective Jan. 1.

Olson's resignation follows that of the former board chairman, H. L. Blackledge of Kearney, who quit because he could not carry out laws he regards as against the best interests of the state, according to the Lincoln Journal.

Nebraska Football Brings Profit To Ticket Scalpers

By SHERRY McGAFFIN
Junior Staff Writer

Ardent Nebraska football fans will do almost anything to see the Cornhuskers power on the playing field and ticket scalpers on the campus can almost name their price and find a willing buyer.

Conditions on the Nebraska campus are almost perfect for profiteers in this enterprising business. Winning seasons, enthusiastic supporters, and sell-out games combine to make black market trade successful.

Memorial Stadium held capacity crowds of over 65,000 for games this year, according to Jim Pittenger, University of Nebraska athletic director.

He added that scalping and ticket exchanging "has been brought on by the public and if the people are willing to pay the prices and if the students are willing to take the risk of being caught there is nothing that I can do."

According to the Attorney General's office, there is no state statute that prohibits selling items above their face value in Nebraska.

Pittenger added that there is nothing illegal about ticket scalping on the campus. Any student that sells his ticket, or any student that is admitted to a game under false identification runs the risk of losing his ticket and being reported.

The comparison of student identification cards and ticket signatures at the gate is one way of checking but if both names check nothing can be done.

Adults may not use student tickets, according to Pittenger. He also said that only married students may be admitted to games on one identification card. This provision is noted on the ticket.

A number of selling methods are used prior to game time each week. Signs in dormitories, fraternities and sororities help to auction off tickets as well as those persons who sell directly at the stadium.

It is virtually impossible to get into a game without a ticket as more than 100 police officials are on duty for every home game.

The selling price for tickets to the Nebraska-Colorado game was reported as being anywhere from $5 to $50. The prices depended on the supply and demand. Profits could total 500 per cent as a student season ticket sells for $10.

One University coed said that her ticket was snatched from her hands while she was on her way to the Nebraska-Colorado game.

The Cornhusker's past record and future expectations of the fans almost assure that this con trade will remain a part of University life. Anyone want to sell a ticket for the Iowa State game?

First Snow Of Season Hits Campus

Lincoln and a chilly University campus got their first taste of cold winter weather Thursday morning when the first snowfall of the year hit snowfall.

Rain mixed with snow and winds gusting to 22 m.p.h. combined to cause miserable conditions Thursday in Lincoln and elsewhere across the state.

Hazardous road warnings were out for Nebraska, but on campus the light taste of snow failed to put much of a damper on spirits riding high for the Iowa State game.

Athletic Director Bob Devaney ordered the football field covered with giant tarpaulins reserved for the occasion. Groundskeeper Bill Sheppard indicated the field would be in fine shape for the game, however.

Forecasts call for no let-up in the rain and shower activity during the next two days.

Variable amounts of rain and snow are expected to continue, but no solid snow-

NU Selected To Train 25 Head Start Teachers

The University of Nebraska has been selected for training Project Head Start teachers for the next year, according to Dr. Millicent Savery, program director.

A $177,854 federal grant will set up four eight-week sessions for training 25 teachers each session.

Head Star is aimed at pre-school children from low-income families, according to Dr. Millicent.

The program aims at three aspects, she said: education of the child, parent education and health and social aspects.

Last summer the University had received grants for two eight-week sessions. It is now one of three institutions in this area offering Head Start training to potential teachers and aides.

Other programs are at Stephens College in Missouri and Colorado State College at Greeley.

"The teachers and aides go back home to their communities," Dr. Savery said, and work in the Head Start programs.

The project is financed through the federal government's Office of Economic Opportunity and trainees' tuition, books and housing are paid, in addition to a stipend.

The program involves discussion, study, guest lecturers and extensive reading, Dr. Savery said.

Trainees will also spend about a third of their time working with children in Lincoln Head Start Centers, she added. The purpose of these centers is to help children who are disadvantaged because of low income.

Often, these children start school with a limited experience background, Dr. Savery indicated.

"We are not trying to give the child just a head start," said Margaret Paxton, one of the trainees. "We are trying to give him an even start."
