

Senate Committee Finds . . . Student-Run Bookstores Not Economically Sound

A student bookstore does not appear to be economically feasible under present conditions, according to Student Senator Roger Lott, chairman of the Senate's Bookstore Committee.

The committee has been investigating the possibilities available to the ASUN for creating a student-owned and-or managed store.

"Operation (of a bookstore) as it is set up now," Lott said Friday, "would not be of value to the ASUN or to the students."

The operation to which he was referring is that of the University Regents Bookstore, which, according to Lott's preliminary reports, has only 10 to 15 per cent of the book market on campus.

Both the Nebraska Bookstore and the Campus Bookstore are owned by the Nebraska Book Company, a large-scale wholesaler and retailer of text and other books.

Lott said that the Nebraska Book Company is the "number one retailer in the country" and that this size of an operation entails advantages that a smaller store does not have.

SHIPPING ABILITY

One such advantage is the ability to ship large quantities of books no longer used on one campus to another which is using the text.

Lack of adequate floor space is another disadvantage of the Regents' store, he added. "It has only one-fourth the floor space it should have," he said.

Problems also arise outside the economic considerations.

"Who manages such a bookstore is still an open question," Lott said, "should it be run by a student organization, or by the Regents, or who?"

Lott said it is possible that there exists "some way to get out" of these problems in creating a student bookstore. The committee, he said, will continue to investigate other possibilities, including exchanging books not to be used again with other campuses.

PROFESSOR ALFRED W. MEYER . . . addresses NU students on the changing ideology of the Communist Party.

Meyer Tells Students . . . Bolshevik Revolution Failed Revolutionaries

By JAN PARKS
Junior Staff Writer

The Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 did not fulfill the expectations of the revolutionists, Professor Alfred W. Meyer told about 200 University students Friday.

Meyer, a political scientist from the University of Michigan, was the second speaker in a two day symposium on the Bolshevik Revolution, sponsored by the Career Scholars and the University Political Science Department.

The professor has written several works on Communist ideology including the Basic Theory Analysis of Communism.

Lenin's ideology, which amended Marxist thought, "was responsible for the sum total of all policies and efforts after the revolution," Meyer said.

He explained that Leninist rules included: dictatorial rule, mobilization of the masses for total cooperation, terrorism, an emphasis on industrialization to achieve a utopia, and a stressed program of education to modernize the population.

Meyer said that since 1917 the Communist party has been undergoing "a broad and massive attempt to cope doctrinally with the difference between expectation and reality."

"The first 20 years after the Bolshevik Revolution were years of trial and error," Meyer explained, "and only in the late 30's did the Soviet system settle down to something like we know of today."

Meyer likened the Soviet ideology to a catechism.

"You can't really imagine why people cling to the Soviet ideology, with all of its vagueness, until you are subjected to it," Meyer stated.

The Soviet ideology, which he called a "grab bag of ideas," can become a set of blinders of self-deception.

Meyer called the ideology imposed on Russian citizens during Stalin's rule a "web of lies which did not try to understand reality, but to conceal it."

The rigidity of this doctrine had to be charted, he explained and imposed on all aspects of social endeavor. The party had to be careful not to leave any loop holes, Meyer continued.

The professor said that the rigidity of the Russian indoctrination program is being broken, because "it is beginning to fulfill some of the hopes of 1917 into reality."

Meyer said that "political pluralism is on the increase in Russia, which accounts for the conflict of ideas in the USSR today."

The party's ideology is not on the defensive, he said. "The writings of Marx and Engels are being transformed into something conservative."

The professor said that the ideology of the Soviet Union is being taken less and less seriously.

"Somehow Soviet indoctrination is turning into a monologue which people listen to with the same attentiveness that we listen to Fourth of July oratory," he said.

New Executives IFC Will Salary

Interfraternity council officers will begin receiving monthly salaries in January following action taken at last week's IFC meeting.

In accordance with recommendations from a special committee on executive salaries, the Council voted to give their four top officers remuneration in proportion to "the time required in their respective positions."

The new executives who take office next month will receive the following salaries: President, $40 a month ($360 for the nine-month academic year); Vice-President, $15 per month ($135 per year); secretary, $30 per month ($270 per year); and treasurer, $25 per month ($225 per year).

IFC President Gene Hohensee explained the salaries are needed because of the tremendous time demands made upon the officers. These salaries will help encourage top fraternity men to seek the offices who might otherwise decide to devote the time to a paying job, he said.

The Council joins several other campus organizations who pay salaries to all or part of their personnel, including the Daily Nebraskan and the Cornhusker. Student Senate last spring voted to pay salaries to its top three executives.

Hohensee said the election for IFC treasurer will be conducted at Wednesday's meeting, and the presidential election will be Dec. 13.

Mike May, Acacia, and Rick Russell, Alpha Tau Omega, have been nominated for the treasurer's post. Further nominations will be accepted prior to the election, Hohensee said.

The team defeated Northwestern University in the semi-finals and Rockhurst Col-

Olson said that Dick Sherman and Terry Hall were seeded second highest in the preliminaries in the senior division of the tournament.

Sherman and Hall, won 8 and lost 2, Olson said.

NCD May Support McCarthy

Nebraska Concerned Democrats (NCD) will hold a meeting Monday evening to discuss support of Sen. Eugene McCarthy in his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination, according to Gene Pokorny, NCD treasurer.

Pokorny was one of the Nebraska delegation that attended the National Conference for Concerned Democrats in Chicago this weekend.

McCarthy spoke to the group Sunday, three days after he had announced that he would oppose Lyndon Johnson in the Democratic primary.

Pokorny said that the NCD will encourage candidates for delegation spots in the Democratic national convention who are pledged to McCarthy or who are not pledged to Johnson.

Scheduled for 8 p.m. in the Nebraska Union, the NCD meeting is open to anyone interested in working for delegate hopefuls not pledged to Johnson.

Director of Sheldon Art Gallery, Norman A. Geske, has been chosen to assemble the American exhibition to be entered in the 34th Biennial International Art Show in Venice, Italy next year.

Geske was appointed by the Smithsonian Institute of Washington, D.C. to select the individual paintings, sculpture and other art displays that will represent the U.S. at the Art Show.

Directing the American contribution for the show, the world's oldest and largest art show, is one of the highest honors that can be awarded to a gallery director, according to a Sheldon representative.

The Venice show will run from June through September next year. Works of art from nearly every country will be on display and a world panel of judges will present awards to the outstanding collections.
