

Evaluation Committee Finds . . . Senate Awareness Is Essential Factor

Student dissatisfaction with present ASUN Senate action has been termed the main impetus to the formation of the present study on ASUN districting, according to Bruce Bailey, chairman of the ASUN executive committee to evaluate election systems.

"Senators should be aware of the students' needs in order to be a representative body," Bailey explained.

Bailey said that to accomplish this goal a different system of districting is not necessarily the only answer. He felt that if Senators would confer with leaders of IDA, IFC, and Panhellenic they would have a better sampling of student views.

The committee had their first meeting Tuesday afternoon and at this time outlined their intentions for the forthcoming report. Their intentions are threefold: to define "representative," to accrue the limits of a representative system on the ASUN level, and to verify the number if people that ASUN affects.

"The foremost question in my mind is are we, the students, really being represented under our present ASUN Senate?" Bailey stated.

Presently the Regents, administration, and faculty try to sample student opinion but, according to Bailey, Senators do not.

The committee chairman, however, emphasized that his committee was interested and definitely did want students to make their opinions known on the subject of redistricting.

Two Faculty Members Elected AAUP Officers

By GARY GILLEN
Junior Staff Writer

The offices of secretary and president were given to two University faculty members during the Nebraska Conference of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) at their meeting in Kearney last Saturday.

They are Erwin Goldenstein, professor and chairman of the department of history and philosophy of education, president and Lawrence Poston, associate professor of English, secretary.

Besides the election of officers the conference voted 20-19 against expressing concern over use of undercover agents on Nebraska university and college campuses.

Goldenstein recalled that one of the arguments against support of the measure was fear of the AAUP being misunderstood by passing the proposal.

The conference also commended Creighton and Omaha Universities for removing disciplinary records from student academic transcripts.

They also commended the State Normal Board, which is now under censure by the AAUP, for its efforts to bring its procedures into conformity with the organization's standards of academic freedom.

Other officers elected were Loyd Hubenka, vice president; Creighton University; and Harold Blostein, treasurer, Kearney State College.

University bodies, he said. The committee has no official power to see that its recommendations are noted, but in extreme cases the committee will acquire legal council for students, Poston noted.

The power of the AAUP on a national scale lies mainly in its ability to censure.

Censure may be applied to the school's administration, its policy or its individual organizations.

The only Nebraska college to receive AAUP censure was Wayne State College during the winter of 1964. The censure in this case was voted on the State Normal Board and not on the institution's administrative officers.

Regent Greenberg: NU-OU Merger Favored By Outstate Nebraskans

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a four-part series on the proposed NU-OU merger. The final part will appear Monday.

By ED ICENOGLE
Senior Staff Writer

Nebraskans outside of Omaha appear willing to help finance the higher education of thousands of students at the currently municipal University of Omaha.

According to University of Nebraska Regent B. N. Greenberg of York, there is no vocal outstate objection to the proposed merger of NU and the University of Omaha.

The merger, which will be voted on Tuesday by Omahans, would make OU the University of Nebraska at Omaha, and would put it under state control and financing.

BEST EDUCATION

"I would say the people in Nebraska are all interested in the best possible education for students," Greenberg said Thursday in a telephone interview. "I have heard no objection out in this part of the state."

More students will have an opportunity to go to school if the merger is approved by the Omahans, Greenberg said.

The combination of the two schools was approved last April by the Nebraska Unicameral and the merger requires only the consent of the city of Omaha to be effected.

Greenberg also foresaw "cooperated advantages by the two schools in many areas—libraries, printing, advanced education and the integration of the two educational television systems."

The head of the Unicameral's Legislative Study Committee on Higher Education, Sen. John E. Knight of Lincoln, agreed that there will be advantages to the merger, although he anticipates problems that could have been avoided.

"I opposed it (the merger) to begin with," Knight said Thursday, "because we need a coordinating body first."

COORDINATION

During the last session of the legislature he proposed the creation of a commission to coordinate the activities of Nebraska's Universities and colleges. The measure, LB961, was defeated, but the study committee was created.

"I think this was backwards," he said. "But after the merger became a legislative fact, I think it should pass."

Knight said that if OU is not merged with NU, the Omaha school may continue to "press" to become the state's second state university.

But, with the merger, some advantages can be obtained, he indicated.

DEVELOPMENT

"I would expect the two campuses to work together in developing a metropolitan resident campus in Omaha," Knight said, "and working with the University of Nebraska at Lincoln in developing a total program including the exchange of faculty members."

The University of Nebraska at Omaha would possibly develop special colleges, extensive programs in graduate education and industrial technical training unlike that at the present University of Nebraska, he said.

On the other hand, Knight said that there would be problems because of the swift merger of the schools.

NO GROUNDWORK

"For example, are we going to have duplicate residential housing in Omaha?" he questioned. "Of, if there are increases in appropriations for building, where will they go?"

Knight also contended that groundwork should have been laid for different graduate programs which may or may not be created.

The Senator voted against the merger in the Unicameral on the grounds that the action was being taken "without an in-depth study of the problem areas."

RESIDENT COLLEGE?

"I'm sure, for example," he said, "that the President (OU President Dr. Kirk Naylor) said that he expects us to build residence halls there. This is the reason for Omaha wanting to merge because they want a residential college?"

Funds for extensive building of residences have not been raised for either the present OU or the proposed University of Nebraska at Omaha.

If the merger is approved by Omaha, the legislature has provided for a $3 million appropriation for the Omaha campus, plus an additional $1 million expansion fund.

FINANCING

Through this financing, the University campus at Omaha would be part of the University of Nebraska's financial program.

"The legislature has already authorized the Regents of the University of Nebraska to make certain expenditures for activity at the Omaha campus," Dr. Joseph Soshnik, vice-chancellor for administration and corporate secretary of the Regents, said.

"In that relationship, the University of Nebraska at Omaha would be a part of the program," Soshnik said.

COLLEGE BUDGETS

But Soshnik explained that the finances of the two campuses, if Omaha approves the merger, is more complicated than a matter of comparable budgets for the two schools.

From the state's higher education general fund of $52 million, the Omaha campus would receive $3 million, plus the other monies for expansion. (That $52 million does not include financing for the University of Nebraska at Lincoln.)

"In the aggregate, Omaha would have a budget of about $7 million," Soshnik said, "with the additional revenues taken in from earlier financing and tuition."

APPROPRIATIONS

The Unicameral appropriations for the University of Nebraska, exclusive of the University of Nebraska at Omaha, is $86 million for the biennium.

But Soshnik was quick to point out that the figure applies to two years and includes many other areas of financing than the education of students on the Lincoln campus.

"When we are speaking of this $86 million," he said, "we are dealing with an institution broader in scope than Lincoln."

This scope includes the College of Medicine in Omaha, experimental stations over the state, and numerous other projects, he pointed out.
