

Senate elections . . . Candidates comment on campaign issues

Senate candidates continued campaigning for the April 12 elections as they made comments on major issues for the Daily Nebraskan.

Filing under Architecture and Engineering, Art Denney wants to see more student issues, particularly the concerns of Engineering students, dealt with by the Student Senate. Denney is also in favor of having greater communication between students and their government.

Carol Madson, a sophomore in Arts and Sciences, wants ASUN to help students find and use all legal channels to change unfavorable University policy before the students resort to demonstrations.

Students show responsibility

By using the proper channels to bring about change, students would be showing more responsibility, since certain drastic actions taken outside of the legal path can hurt the University financially, Miss Madson said.

Teachers College junior, Curt Donaldson, plans to work in freshman English and race relations, the latter of which is a proposed new committee under the PSA ticket.

Students on the education committee try out new freshman teaching techniques for the English department before they are incorporated in the curriculum. The race committee would endorse plans to stop discrimination and encourage better relations among people.

Nelson expresses concern

Mike Nelson, Teachers College sophomore, expressed concern that the Senate has up to now been concerned only with analysis of problems without offering concrete solutions. "Action has to be taken," he asserted.

He also noted the needs for a course in Afro-American education and better communication between student and senator.

More residence hall representatives on housing committee was proposed by James Donat, junior law student and graduate college candidate. He also endorsed a "partnership" between Administration and student.

He added that he would continue work already begun on due process for students.

Green wants representation

David Green, off-campus junior, said that the main reason he was running was so that off campus students would have better representation.

He noted that often they were out of touch with campus activities and felt that some action should be taken to get them more involved.

Business Administration junior Roger Roemmich noted that this main concern was within the realm of education.

Curriculum improvements wanted

He suggested improvements within his college curriculum through work with the advisory board.

Two main issues were supported by Ronald Murdock, junior in Business Administration. First he said that he would encourage senatorial seminars and office hours so that students and senators might work more effectively together.

Second, he stated that he would support the idea that students above the freshman level may choose their own housing.

Mobley wants student voice

An incumbent A&S senator, Bill Mobley wants to promote an increase in the student voice in decision-making at the University. While an equal voice for students with faculty and administration is a long way off, Mobley said, an increase in SFA committees would begin the trend.

Mobley also would like ASUN to work with a strong library instruction program to teach freshmen efficient use of the library.

Rick Russell, an Arts and Sciences junior, wants Senate to continue working on such programs as the World in Revolution Conference as well as committee work in special education and student power.

Russell would also like to see the Bill of Rights document implemented into University policy.

ASUN evaluates

Jim Humlicek, Arts and Sciences junior, felt that it is important for ASUN to work with the faculty and Administration in evaluating the present educational system and developing new ideas for it.

He added that involvement in educational progress was his main concern.

Freshman Arts and Sciences student Tom Lonquist noted that district representation of students might be more effective than representation by college.

He said that it was more likely that a student would be acquainted with his district representative, perhaps determined by living units, than he would be with a college representative.

Spring Day games to be held May 3

Get out your grubbies, your sunglasses and your sweatshirts—Spring Day is coming.

Plans are being completed for Spring Day, an annual event, unfamiliar to freshmen and sophomores on this campus.

Interviews for Spring Day workers will be held Saturday from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. in the Nebraska Union. Interested people can sign up at the Student Activities bulletin board.

Spring Day will be May 3. Classes will be called off at noon and students will go to East Campus for the games.

Traditional games played

Traditional games like tug-of-war and pushball will be played again this year, according to Tom Pauley, Spring Day chairman.

In the past, some of the games have been the log-pole fight, in which two men have a joust standing on a ment implemented into University policy.

Larry Anderson, a law student filing for a graduate seat, wants to continue to work for reform in the disciplinary process at the University.

Anderson would like to have the Student Senate look into the Weaver Report on disciplinary reforms for possible implementation of its recommendations.

ASUN evaluates

Jim Humlicek, Arts and Sciences junior, felt that it is important for ASUN to work with the faculty and Administration in evaluating the present educational system and developing new ideas for it.

He added that involvement in educational progress was his main concern.

Freshman Arts and Sciences student Tom Lonquist noted that district representation of students might be more effective than representation by college.

He said that it was more likely that a student would be acquainted with his district representative, perhaps determined by living units, than he would be with a college representative.

Nelson sees lack

Mary Lynne Nelson sophomore from Arts and Sciences said she decided to run because of the distinct lack of individual student interest in ASUN.

She encouraged more involvement of the student in ASUN and more involvement of ASUN in campus affairs.

Nebraska School of Religion to try team-teaching approach

A team teaching approach will be tried next fall by three professors at the Nebraska School of Religion.

Dr. Keith Stephenson, explained that he had two other theologians will be teaching a course dealing with modern problems in society from the standpoint of current Roman Catholic, Judaic and Protestant thought.

"We are concerned with the revolutions that our western society is undergoing," Dr. Stephenson said.

The content of the course includes discussion and readings in the areas of the revolutions in technology, communications between people and moral standards, he explained.

Specifically the course will cover the relationship between the individual and himself on the topic of sex, the individual and the state in regards to civil disobedience, the individual and society in regards to race problems, and the individual in relation to his mate and his world.

"The emphasis on the method of presentation will be far more in the informal way of give and take between the professors and the students," Dr. Stephenson explained.

Discussions will be based on presentation and readings in the subject areas, he said. He explained the course would not be a sociological

FM drive interviews to be held

Persons interested in working for the proposed campus FM station solicitation drive should sign up for an interview in the ASUN office in the Nebraska Union before noon Thursday, according to Bob Peterson, chairman of the USBF Board of Trustees.

Interviews will be held Sunday afternoon in the ASUN office.

The campaign drive, authorized by the University Board of Regents, will be held April 29 to May 8 to raise $8000 for the station.

The campaign results from student elections last fall saw 83 per cent approve giving 15 cents per student each semester to support a student-operated campus FM station.

Although ASUN presented the vote to the Regents in January, it appears no action will be taken until the students obtain the required $6,000 for the initial construction and first year's operation of the station.

Negro history course under consideration

A University course in American Negro history is conceivable, Dr. Phillip Crowl, chairman of the history department, told the Nebraska Free University Black Power class Tuesday.

Crowl explained that although consideration of organizing a course in Negro history would begin immediately, the course "cannot possibly be offered before second semester of next year."

"As far as having one member of the present history staff to teach such a course, I cannot release one man," Crowl said.

The chairman explained department has other more urgent needs now," he said, "and too many other priorities."

However, a joint effort of the history, sociology and English departments might be a more feasible method of offering a Negro history course, Crowl suggested.

He pointed out that different lecturers from three or four departments could teach on a "volunteer basis, so that one professor would not be overburdened."

Crowl felt that the English department could contribute significantly to a Negro history course because students could study literature such as Uncle Tom's Cabin and the writings of Richard Wright.

The administration of an inter-departmental course is difficult, Crowl said, and often inter-departmental courses tend to fall apart. "People tend to lose their enthusiasm," he said.

"Inter-departmental courses do provide flexibility, however," he said, "and courses should be as flexible as possible to respond to student demands."

Crowl explained the procedure for adding a new course as follows:

- first the course must gain the approval of the department involved.
- second, a written explanation of the purposes and objectives of the course must be submitted to the Course and Study Committee in the Arts and Sciences College for approval.
- the third step, if approval requirements are met, is to begin preliminary plans for the course.

Crowl's discussion of the possibility of a course in Negro history was at the request of the Black Power Free University class.

The Black Power class, taught by Dr. Jack Siegman, assistant professor of sociology, is an attempt to bring about a change in the white campus community, according to Dorothy Walker, a class member.

"We want to make people aware of some of the problems and solution of the racial situation on campus and in the community," Miss Walker explained.

She suggested that a random sample poll of student interest in a Negro history course be taken.

"I don't think a poll is necessary," Crowl said, "because it is self evident that there is student interest in the Negro race problems."
