

University undergoes campus renewal

Oldfather Hall, one of the University's most recent additions, heightens campus scenery.

'Concrete jungle' grows to fit needs

On the 32 major buildings on the University downtown campus, at least eleven are undergoing some kind of renovation this semester.

The construction has resulted in snarled-up traffic and the loss of at least 100 parking spaces, according to University Police Chief Eugene Masters.

English classes are being held in almost every building on campus, the result of Andrews Hall reconstruction, English Department Chairman Dudley Bailey said.

In many other buildings, classes are being disrupted by minor remodeling or by construction noises.

Four new buildings are still under construction.

Hamilton Hall, an eight-story, $8 million dollar structure that will house the entire chemistry department, is scheduled to be done by September, 1969, but it might be a month or so later than that, according to Dr. James Karr, a spokesman for the chemistry department.

The fate of Avery Laboratory and the 501 Building, both currently housing the chemistry department, is uncertain at this time, Karr said.

The new Women's Physical Education Building, originally slated for completion September 1, is still not done, according to Dr. Dudley Ashton, chairman of women's physical education.

"At present, we are teaching classes despite the workmen," Miss Ashton said. Work remains to be done on the air conditioner and the floors.

Dedication of the $2.1 million dollar building is to be held November 3, and it will definitely be completed by that time, she said.

Kimball Recital Hall is progressing pretty much on schedule, according to David Fowler, vice chairman and professor of the department of music.

Seats and stage equipment for the new building, which will be primarily a concert recital hall, have still not been chosen or ordered. Fowler continued.

The Student Union, slated for completion September 1, has run into the usual brush-up problems and delays, according to Director Allen Bennett.

"We are about six to eight weeks away from completion," Bennett said Tuesday. The Crib and the second floor multipurpose room are the primary areas still under construction. Eventually the Crib will occupy the space where the old crib and cafeteria were.

The second floor multipurpose room, which is adjacent to the ballroom, will seat 1100 for a lecture and 700 for a dinner. In addition, it can be divided into as many as seven different rooms, each seating about 100.

The new lounge, greatly enlarged over the old one, is to be carpeted by Wednesday and furnished by Monday, Bennett said.

Bennett estimated that the Union will be totally complete by the end of Thanksgiving vacation.

Andrews Hall is being completely changed about, Bailey said. Classrooms are being constructed in the basement and first floor and offices on second and third floor.

Bailey said that Andrews Hall would probably be ready in January. Currently, English offices are in Seaton Hall with classes "spread all over the campus."

Extensive work is being done at Nebraska Hall, Miller said.

The first floor is being converted to classrooms and offices. The second and third floors are being developed into an undergraduate library, which will eventually house 75,000 volumes and many reader stations.

Miller noted that the basement of Burnett Hall is being renovated for the psychology department. The basement of the Student Health Center is undergoing facelift. University High School is receiving new air conditioning and heating systems.

Work on the Sheldon Sculpture Gardens, to be located just south and west of the Art Gallery will begin within two weeks, Miller continued.

As soon as Oldfather Hall and the first floor of Andrews Hall are completed, work will commence on the Social Science Building, Miller said. Extensive remodeling of the entire building is planned.

Major construction jobs on campus have caused havoc with traffic flow and parking lots, Police Chief Masters said.

Currently, a trench blocks 12th Street across from Oldfather Hall. Masters expressed the hope that the street will be open by Saturday to promote the flow of football traffic.

The new chemistry building and music buildings are built on the sites of former parking lots. They have also blocked access to other parking spaces, Masters pointed out.

New parking lots have been added, especially on the east side of the campus, he noted. Eventually, parking space will be available for every student car at once, although many of these spaces would be quite a distance from the heart of the campus.

Hamilton Hall, new University of Nebraska chemistry building scheduled for completion next fall, holds the attention of Pam Butterfield and Jude Bowden, both Lincoln freshmen, as they search for the elevator shaft in the eight-story structure.

Big Red tickets available

Football tickets for students who did not purchase them in the spring will be available through Wednesday at the Coliseum.

Student tickets bought in the spring can be picked up through Friday.

Students must pick tickets up personally.

The ticket office is anxious that students who want to buy tickets do so as soon as possible. Mail orders have not been processed since February, and if the students do not want the tickets, the mail orders will be filled.

Tickets cost $10.25 with a student identification card. The card must also be presented at the ticket gate.

AWS schedules Key orientation

Attendance at an orientation meeting Thursday 7:00 p.m. in the Union Ballroom is mandatory for all women interested in keys, according to Christie Schwartzkopf, AWS key chairman.

The key system is open to all junior and senior women who maintain a 2.0 average and meet the key program requirements.

These requirements include application to AWS and written permission from the applicants' parents. A deposit of $1 is assessed for the key.

Miss Schwartzkopf stressed that all women who are interested in the program attend the orientation program even if they have not yet made an application. Applications are available anytime from the AWS office and the Thursday night meeting will be preceded by a meeting of the key chairmen at 6:30.

English 293, shows development of European thought through novels in English translation. After meeting with the instructors, students will take a final examination in September to complete the course.

English reading classes will meet

Dr. Robert Narveson and Dr. James Roberts have announced the first of two final meetings of the 1968 Summer Reading Courses.

Dr. Jarbeson's class, English 293C, will meet Monday, September 16, in Oldfather Hall, room 303 at 7 p.m. English 265C will meet at the same time with Dr. Roberts in Oldfather, Room 205.

Students enrolled in the summer classes have been involved in independent study by reading a representative selection of novels for their respective courses.

Time cards lose their importance

The Administration Building has permanently lost its weaving limbs of students waiting for time appointment cards to drop or add a course.

No time appointment cards will be needed to get into the Coliseum for Drop and Add Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday, September 11, 12, or 13.

"There has to be a better system than this one," said Lee H. Chatfield, Associate Dean of Student Affairs. "We will try something else next semester."

On Monday and Tuesday, time appointment cards for the entire day were distributed by 10 a.m. and many students were turned away.

Some 500 students were able to bring their grades up enough during the summer because of the changes that were made in the grading system last spring. This put an unexpected strain on general registration and the number of classes available.

Several of the departments within the Arts and Sciences College are short of faculty members because of unexpected resignations during the summer. This has placed a burden on other departments to provide more courses.

Even with the increased number of students and decreased faculty, Chatfield was optimistic that the balance between the supply and demand of classes is much better this fall than in the past three years.

"The number of people being kept out of classes is
