Credit sought for NFU courses

The Nebraska Free University committee is exploring the possibility of offering credit for some NFU courses.

Cindy Wortman, co-chairman of the committee, said Thursday that the committee is making plans for registration, slated for Oct. 14, and is also attempting to resolve some problems.

ONE OF those problems is that no credit is received for NFU classes. The committee is trying to remedy this situation, possibly in time for second semester. Miss Wortman noted.

"We have spoken with the administration," she continued. But much remains to be done. If a qualified professor is teaching the class, getting credit should "not be too difficult," she said. However, if a student is teaching, getting credit will be much harder, she added.

Attendance problems, encountered last semester, are also occupying the committee's time. People register for the classes, but attendance slowly withers away as the semester progresses. Instructors have been "disgusted" with this situation, Miss Wortman pointed out.

Thursday evening a meeting was held for all those interested in teaching this semester. Course offerings were also discussed, she said.

As in the past, NFU will offer a variety of courses under a variety of instructors, she commented.

If a group of students want a special course, possibly the NFU will attempt to find a teacher for the class.

Enrollment last semester was 600. Miss Wortman hopes that enrollment this semester will top 800.

Scuba diving immerges as popular sports class

Even in Nebraska, a thousand miles from any ocean, scuba diving is a popular sport.

The 45 to 50 people now engaged in the scuba course offered Monday and Wednesday evenings at the Coliseum are evidence of this fact.

Omaha scuba instructor Bill

Pearce has offered the course at Union College in Lincoln, Creighton University in Omaha, and in adult education programs and high schools throughout the state.

This is the first semester scuba has been offered at the University. The course includes 33 hours of classroom and practical instruction and will be followed by an open water dive.

Students passing both a practical and written test will receive their certification from the National Association of Underwater Instructors. Pearce described this certification as "a drivers license of diving."

100 years in 5 months activities

Charter Day, Febr. 14, will be the kick-off date for a number of activities celebrating the University's centennial year.

The day itself will feature an all-University Convocation with President Robert Goheen of Princeton University as the featured speaker.

THE CONVOCATION will be followed by a luncheon for distinguished guests of the University, said Dr. Wallace C. Peterson, chairman of the Faculty Centennial Committee.

In March there will be a symposium in "Education and Economic Growth."

Highlights of this event will be addresses by Professor Firtz Machlup of Princeton University and Professor George Bereday of Columbia University.

Machlup is a leading economist, and Bereday is a recognized authority in primary and secondary education.

On March 13, Marion Anderson will present "The Lincoln Portrait" with the spring concert of the University Orchestra. The orchestra's spring tour will also emphasize a centennial theme.

From March 17 to April 13 the American portion of the Venice Biennale art exhibit will be on display at Sheldon Gallery.

ANOTHER CENTENNIAL symposium will be held in May with the theme "Nebraska in the 1970's." It will be an American Assembly type of program including leaders of various interest groups from all parts of the state.

Currently the "NEBRASKA ALUMNUS" magazine is publishing a dual series of Centennial articles titled "The Direction of the University — the Beginning of the Secondary Century."

The series features articles on the University by representatives of the University Regents, the University administration and the Governor of the State. Articles by distinguished members of the University faculty on their particular disciplines are also included.

Centennial celebration will end officially at Commencement in June, 1969. The Commencement will receive national publicity, and honorary degrees will be presented to persons of national and international importance.
