Institutional Research department compiles college drop-out data

by John Dvorak
Senior Staff Writer

Why do students leave the University? How much more space will the school require in future years? Are graduate teaching loads too heavy?

Searching for and compiling answers to these and other questions are the function of the Department of Institutional Research, according to Harry Allen, director.

ALLEN and his staff have made numerous planning and management studies for the University since the department's creation in 1965. Before becoming director, Allen was involved in higher education planning in Colorado. He has been consulted in a number of higher education studies.

The Research department, which has no administrative responsibilities, reports directly to Chancellor Clifford Hardin, according to Allen.

The department relies heavily on computers and data processing in compiling the various studies. Graduate students often assist the director and his staff.

Currently, the research office is trying to understand why some students, after enrolling, do not remain to complete their degrees, Allen explained.

A FIVE PAGE survey sheet was sent to more than a thousand students who did not return to the University this fall.

The former students were asked to select some reasons for leaving NU and were also questioned about their living environment and financial status.

Results of the questionnaire are being processed by computer and Allen expects to release the results sometime this fall.

The Institution, Research Department is also participating in a continuing study of space requirements on both Lincoln campuses, Allen noted.

A major study was completed in 1965 by a consulting firm and a campus plan was developed, but this study must be continually updated and corrected as needs change, Allen said.

For example, the projected space deficit at the school is 2.4 million square feet, mainly in teaching laboratories, faculty offices and research facilities, according to Allen.

THIS deficit is slowly being erased by the construction of Oldfather Hall, Hamilton Chemistry Building, and the remodeling of Andrews Hall.

An extremely complicated question, according to Allen, concerns graduate teaching loads. All academic personnel must be consulted in order to gain a better understanding of the problem.

Allen emphasized, however, that the Department of Institutional Research is not the only place where studies are compiled.

Dean Merk Hobson's office constantly reviews the curriculum and Vice-chancellor Joseph Sosnhk studies financial and business matters, he pointed out.

Institutional research departments are gaining popularity at all major universities, Allen said. Their job is a continuing assignment which involves both long range planning and decisions which have immediate impact.

Coed originates idea Seminar Focus: deprived child

The desire of an NU coed to combine her college major and her field of interest has led to a new seminar in the area of the culturally deprived child.

Dorothy Walker, a junior in Teachers College, has begun organizing the seminar as a result of her summer experience in the ghettos of New York. An orientation meeting is scheduled for 4:30 p.m. Wednesday in Room 200, Teachers College.

Miss Walker said the seminar is open to anyone. There will be no fee.

"We can't help but study poverty and racial problems," she added. "I hope we'll be able to gain insights into these problems and how education can help solve them."

Last spring, when she proposed that such a course be offered in Teachers College, department representatives said they weren't sure undergraduates were interested in such a course, Miss Walker said.

ASUN staff positions now open

ALTHOUGH program plans will be completed after members discuss their special interests, Miss Walker has some plans and "a few dreams."

She said seminar leaders, in cooperation with Teachers College and Dr. Charles Godwin, will keep track of films, speeches and lectures being given in classes that may touch on the disadvantaged child and his problems.

Miss Walker hopes the program will center on education, educational psychology, sociology and hopefully will branch into other fields.

Miss Walker spent last summer working in New York state with disadvantaged children from Brooklyn and the Bronx. Others who have worked with such children through programs such as Head Start are being asked to speak, she said.

"I hope we'll be able to take some trips to Omaha to see schools on the North Side and Project Chance, and possibly to a larger city, maybe Kansas City," Miss Walker said.

ASUN has established a new program called the ASUN Staff. Positions are open primarily for underclassmen, although anyone may apply.

The ASUN Staff will assist the committees, senators and executives to carry out the business of student government.

FOUR ASUN Senate positions are now open; two in Graduate College, one in Arts and Sciences and one in Teachers College.

Two Publications Board positions are also open. All positions will be filled at the next Senate meeting.

Student representatives are still needed for the ASUN Commencement Committee and the subcommittee on Student Organizations.

Applications for all positions are due at the ASUN office by October 5.

Interested students may obtain applications or have their questions answered in Room 335, Nebraska Union.
