

That was the weekend that was--the Old Market

pictorial Omaha journey into 'what's happening' for weekend wanderers

The Old Market, through the eyes of an old fruit market store front. Some of the buildings, reportedly of 1880 construction, center around 11th and Howard Streets in Omaha.

Women ... a subject of art marketable since the days of old.

photographs by
J. E. Shaw

The Old Market's Farthest Outpost, a place to sit, talk, smoke, think. Roger DuRand (left), owner, sits in on a session of people being people.

Market: a gathering of people.—Webster's Giant graphics, a coat of paint. Diane Johnson, owner of Reba Imported Dresses, watches the sprucing up of the Old Market. She reported she sold all of her wares and is awaiting another shipment.

Soul Sisters: a Girls Town nun brings a flock of young people.

