

NU speech and hearing clinic provides community service

by Bill Smitherman
Nebraskan Staff Writer

The speech and hearing clinic at the University of Nebraska offers a unique service to the community according to clinic coordinator David Hamnett.

The clinic, involving all faculty members and 55 students, is involved not only in training and research work, but also offers service to the city, county, and state, he said. Clinic staff members work in actual therapy and in educational projects such as the hearing booths at the State Fair and the Lincoln Health Fair.

THE CLINIC operates as a part of the University Department of Speech under the direction of Dr. Herbert Schliesser. Student clinicians are working toward degrees in Speech Pathology and Audiology.

Hamnett said that students become eligible for Clinic work during their junior year.

Though class work is still involved, clinical work becomes an important part of their training at this time.

The clinical work is varied. At first the students work in the clinic itself under fairly close supervision. Then, as graduate students, they work as clinicians in several places in the community. Sometimes teams of staff members do work in outstate schools.

In the Lincoln community there are twelve facilities where students do practical work. These include several local hospitals, convalescent homes, and special schools. Student staff members also conduct the new student hearing test at the Student Health Center and work at the Handicapped Children's Center in the Department of Pediatrics at the College of Medicine in Omaha, Hamnett said.

PATIENTS OF ALL age-groups and problem types are treated at the Clinic. They range from children who have never learned to walk and old people suffering speech difficulty from strokes to retarded children and those with emotional problems to patients suffering from organic defects, he noted.

Patients are seen on a varying schedule according to their needs and clinic space limitations. "Space is probably the greatest limiting factor in the growth of the clinic", Hamnett continued.

The training program at the University of Nebraska has offered courses to the Masters degree level in speech therapy for several years. Recently, program of expansion has been conducted and the department has been authorized to offer a Ph.D. degree.

The clinic is partially self sustaining and charges fees to its clients other than University students and faculty. Fees range from three dollars an hour for in-clinic treatment to five dollars an hour for out-of-clinic treatment.

Graduate students Lee Volkmer and Mrs. Alice Anderson participate in the speech and hearing clinic.

Dormitory construction questioned

The three students also presented a second proposal calling for establishment of a University community-wide committee to plan dorm construction.

"Because most of the University community is affected directly or indirectly by housing construction, the community should be represented equitably on the planning boards or committees which make construction decisions," they said.

THEY SUGGESTED the committee be given "final authority in its decisions concerning the determination of need for additional housing, construction dates, directional goals of residence halls and final plans for them."

The committee, they said, should have 13 members from the University community including residence directors, food service directors, faculty, students, administrators and temporary members on a consulting basis.

Sports weekend

Nebraska's cross-country team's attempt to win its first conference title since 1940 is one of the highlights of a weekend sports calendar of five events in Lincoln.

Besides the Kansas State-Nebraska Homecoming football clash at 2 p.m. Saturday, the NU freshman football squad shoots for its ninth straight victory against the K-State freshman at 2:30 p.m. Friday at Memorial Stadium.

The NU freshmen, led by quarterback Van Brownson, have rolled to a 40-21 victory over Missouri and a 42-7 trouncing of Iowa State, while the Wildcat frosh are winless in two starts including a 28-14 loss to Missouri.

NU CROSS country coach Frank Sevieng sends a seven-man team to compete in the three-mile Big Eight cross country championships at Lawrence, Kans., hoping to advance from the past two-year's last place finishes.

Six of last year's top 10 finishers return to the meet. But Sevieng, whose Husker crew finished 3-1 during the regular season, is counting on junior college transfer Pete Brang, Mike Lee, Jim Lang, Greg Carlberg and Mel Campbell to help the Huskers.

AWS assaults problem . . .

Charge of the night brigade

AWS will sponsor a program Monday, Nov. 11, featuring Frederic Storaska who will speak on "Prevention of Assaults on Women."

Storaska is from North Carolina and has studied karate, judo and jujitsu and has taught self defense to national, state and local law enforcement agents, according to an AWS representative.

"I include every possible situation where a girl has been assaulted and how to prevent its occurrence," Storaska states in a release concerning his program.

"If for some reason the assault does occur, then I cover how to prevent the girl from being harmed in any way."

"APPROXIMATELY 60 per cent of all girls of high school and college age who are assaulted are assaulted by their own dates," Storaska states in the release.

The dating situation is a major part of the program, according to the release.

An AWS representative said Storaska covers minor annoyances in addition to serious assaults. This includes obscene phone calls, peeping toms, exhibitionists, etc.

The program will be held at 7 p.m. in the Nebraska Union ballroom.

His name is recorded in the pages of American history. In very small print. In his travels he stopped for refreshment at a New England Inn. Israel Bissel is an authentic American hero. But no one wrote a poem about him.
