

Hours no longer a privilege . . .

Keys should be a 'right'

The same pamphlet and AWS letters to parents and surveys of women students repeatedly refer to the junior and senior keys as a "privilege."

MISS PILMER, a member of the AWS key committee, said she believes that "by the time a girl is old enough to come to the University, setting hours is no longer a privilege, it becomes a right. Making that an assumption, it is not the prerogative of the University to grant that right or to take it away."

Linda Parker, a senior congresswoman who is also a member of the key committee, said, "If your parents tell you you can have a key, it's not a privilege."

The AWS key committee has been working on a proposal to extend the key system to sophomore women for seven months.

MOST CONGRESS women, including Miss Parker and Miss Pilmer, say they are willing to wait awhile for sophomore keys to be certain while AWS presents as airtight a case as possible.

The request must go to the Student Affairs Committee, which Miss Parker said, is expected to pass the final say along to the Board of Regents.

The Student Affairs Committee made the final decision of senior and junior keys, Miss Parker said, but AWS leaders doubt that they'll want to have the final say on sophomore keys.

MISS PARKER indicated that she eventually expects a no-hours policy for all University women. Miss Pilmer said she actively supports the establishment of such a system.

But the two are in a minority of women on campus and would be considered radicals by some parents who've written AWS about the key system.

An AWS survey of one-third of the University women living on campus showed that only 273 favored abolition of all hours, while 1,060 believed freshmen should have hours.

AN AWS compilation of parents' comments on the key system includes this one, "It's people like you who make it so tough on the rest of us to raise our children in the ways of the church and in the eyes of the Lord . . . a 21-year-old has good judgement? Like hell!"

Another parental comment was more representative, "This is a well-worked out system, worthy of a trial."

Apparently, to most campus women and to their parents, AWS does have good judgement and it is slowly but surely proving that University coeds are "mature and responsible."

Bitterness expressed by youth

When asked if he had seen any Russians in Cuba, he replied quickly, "Yes, many. They like to drink hard stuff and it's hard to get, so you can trade it to them for all kinds of things."

He estimated that about 75% of the Cuban people are against Castro's government now, although nearly all had supported him in the beginning.

Pedro tells of food rationing and shortages of clothing and other materials which made him want to leave.

THE TRANSITION to school has been tremendous. In Cuba the boys only attended school in the morning no selection of courses, and each boy must work 45-days on a farm before passing each grade.

Pedro said that even though his father was 41 years old, he was still inducted into the "army."

Angel talks bitterly about his father's arrest as a "political prisoner."

"They just throw you in prison without a reason. There was no reason to throw my father into prison, but they did. And when they came to get him, they stole a lot of things out of our house."

ALL FOUR of the boys say they want to return to Cuba someday, "but not until Castro is gone." They say a revolution will not take place against Castro because he has too much power.

Angel and Pedro go to different Lincoln high schools and both talk of wanting to go to college later on if possible.

The program which brings them to Cristo Rey is federally-sponsored, but carried out by the Catholic Social Service, and is planned to spread the young Cubans all over the country to help them enter American society.

Harris and Satherlund organize sports for the boys and take them hunting and other places.

Leadership seminar, Pershing Rifles project

Pershing Rifles will sponsor a High School Leadership Seminar at the University on Nov. 16.

Sixty-five to seventy high school cadet officers of the Army and Air Force Junior ROTC programs in the Omaha High Schools are expected to attend.

The seminar will be held in the Military and Naval Science Building.

The seminar, according to a Pershing Rifles release, is sponsored for the purpose of developing a high caliber of the high school detachments. The seminar is to stress leadership, the characteristics of a leader, the traits of a leader, and the principles and applications of leadership.

Special stress is to be placed on the importance of esprit de corps, morale, proficiency, and discipline within the unit. Lectures on these subjects are to be given by the senior freshman instructor, MAJ John Biese, and by the Acting Professor of Military Science, LTC Gene B. Wiens.

In addition to lectures, discussion sessions will be held by the members of Pershing Rifles Company A-2 and National Headquarters.

Discussion sessions will delve deeper into the problem of the application of leadership to active duty, cadet leadership, drill units, and civilian life. The release said.

At the seminar, Company A-2 will announce plans for the Spring High School Drill Meet.

Profs want balance in teaching

Cambridge, Mass. — (I.P.) — The notion that professors scorn undergraduate teaching proved wrong when Harvard sociologists questioned faculty members in several institutions.

The professors ask for a balance of undergraduate teaching, graduate teaching, and research.

And the institution's respect for academic integrity is more important than "prospective salary improvement" in attracting faculty members, especially among the top institutions.

These findings appear in a pilot study of the American academic profession by Talcott Parsons, Professor of Sociology, and Gerald M. Platt, Lecturer on Sociology. They polled more than 400 institutions in preparing for a more general study of the academic profession in the United States.

THE SOCIOLOGISTS report that "the undergraduate college, though changed, is flourishing more than before, and not less in the universities with extensive graduate schools.

In the course of the pilot study, the sociologists perfected a method for measuring institutions on a Scale of Institutional Differentiation, based on size, quality and research-orientation. In their small sample, they found this scale proved consistent with major observations.

On this basis, they found "a good deal of strain" in the middling institutions. The strain is reflected in a sense of conflict on the part of the faculty, in the faculty's relatively small contact with the administration, in the rather superficial and misplaced criteria used . . . in evaluating the quality of faculty members at these institutions, and in the heavy teaching and research demands placed on the faculty members, both by their colleagues and by the administration.

The sociologists suggested that these middling institutions "are undergoing the most rapid upgrading and as a result are perhaps placing the most uncoordinated demands on faculty."

IN THE institutions low on the Scale of Institutional Differentiation (size-quality-research-orientation), the sociologists found the administration has a far greater share of decision-making authority in matters which other institutions consider faculty affairs. As a result, in these low-rating institutions, faculty members show a greater interest in exercising power, as distinguished from exercising influence on faculty issues.

In the "top" institutions, by contrast, most of the scholars would prefer to be influential members of their department or of their faculty rather than have formal authority, for instance, as department chairmen.

In these "top" institutions especially, they note, the power in academic affairs is decentralized, and thus neutralized.

Existentialism is topic of speech

Existentialism will be the topic of a speech by the Rev. Walter U. Stohrer, S. J. chairman of the Creighton University philosophy department. Rev. Stohrer will speak at the Graduate Forum on Tuesday Nov. 19, in the basement lounge of Selleck's Fairfield Hall.

End approaches for Cornhusker picture-taking

Next week is the last week that pictures for the 1969 CORNHUSKER will be taken according to Jeanne Baer, CORNHUSKER Panel Editor. Students who had their pictures taken before Oct. 17 and have not yet received their proofs should come back for a retake.

The week is also open to students, especially seniors, who have not had their pictures taken.

"The best time for students to go over is in the morning, especially on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday," Miss Baer said. "Thursday and Friday will be hectic, and kids may have to wait in line for a long time."

Pictures are being taken at UMHE, 333 North 14th Street, from 8:30 - 11:30 and 12:30 - 4:30.

Nixon claims more understanding

WASHINGTON (CPS) — Richard Nixon says he has learned a lot from campaigning for the Presidency, especially in understanding what's on the minds of young people.

He's been on the receiving end of some pretty pointed messages on signs carried by students. One poster held high at a rally in Burbank, Calif., especially caught his eye. "Talk With Us, Not At Us," the sign said.

THE SENTIMENT behind that statement is indicative of what Nixon sees as a gap between generations, a gap he thinks his new political leadership will help to close.

Nixon feels he has made a sincere effort to talk with students, not at them. He offered a platform that includes ending the draft through an all-volunteer army after the Vietnam war is ended.

He has established a Student Coalition to "utilize the talents and energies of the academic community to resolve society's problems."

NIXON ALSO said he would "devise new ways by which, through long term loans, the federal government can further assist students to gain a higher education." He also said he would encourage private enterprise to expand its participation in student financial aid.

Nixon also supports lowering the voting age. Eighteen-year-olds are old enough to vote not because they are old enough to fight, he said, but because they are smart enough to vote.
