

Students spend summer with 'frustrating' poverty

by Carol Anderson
Nebraskan Staff Writer
Four University students discovered this summer that fighting poverty is often frustrating and takes a lot of patience. They also discovered that poverty exists right here in "River City." Arlene Paider, now teaching in Omaha, Sandra Wiese, Barb Phalen and Murph Murphy worked at federally-sponsored Community Action Centers in Pawnee City, Falls City, Auburn and Tecumseh respectively.

NFU on the move

by Sylvia Lee
Nebraskan Staff Writer
The Nebraska Free University is getting back on its feet this fall after what NFU coordinator John Marcotte calls a second semester slump last year.

Many, he said, end before or after the official semester, depending on the class interest and objectives. The concept has come a long way at the University of Nebraska, and at universities all over the country, since the idea caught on four or five years ago. The free university idea arose as a complement and an alternative to the "canning-factory education" many students feel they are getting today, Marcotte said.

Registration has been set for October 6-10 in the Union, and the NFU bulletin board will be set up next week for course suggestions and tentative sign-ups, Marcotte said Thursday.

Why did these towns need help? Employment is a big problem in southeast Nebraska, Miss Phalen said, because the only industry in the area is Campbell Soup Co. Consequently many young people leave.

The committee is contacting former course leaders and inviting all faculty members to participate, according to Marcotte, to get "as many choices as possible."

Most of the students she worked with at Auburn were not poor, Miss Phalen said, but "you have to start somewhere. Anything that can make them feel like a community is worthwhile." Although construction consumed most of her time — sometimes 16 hours a day — Miss Phalen also visited low income farm families with the county organizer.

A course leader need not be knowledgeable in the subject that interests him, Marcotte added, since group interaction is often the most important aspect of a free university course.

Of her experience in Falls City Miss Wiese remarked, "I think it was successful. It takes a long time to get going. We just got our foot in the door and that took all

Meeting times, and the program for courses will be decided within each individual group, with no grades, credit, or attendance requirement, he said.

Students can expect a learning atmosphere free of such prodding devices as grade, assignments, and "metered knowledge," Marcotte said, but they must expect to give of themselves if they gain anything from the experience.

No courses are definite yet, Marcotte said, but booklets and advertising will be circulated on campus when a list is made up in the next couple of weeks.

He encourages freshmen and other students afraid of a too-heavy load to sign up and try a course that looks interesting. "If it proves to be too much, nobody will be mad if you drop out," Marcotte said.

Some ideas under consideration are a discussion group which could meet alternate Wednesdays after foreign films, and sensitivity training class. The latter is sort of amateur group therapy where people have the opportunity to discover themselves and how they relate to others, Marcotte said.

Game to draw big media

A large press contingent will cover the Nebraska-Southern Cal game Saturday besides the regular Nebraska news media.

The lineup includes: Matur White, Des Moines Register and Tribune; Dave Simpson, New York Times; Pat Putnam, Sports Illustrated; Jeff Prugh and John Hall, Los Angeles Times; Bud Furillo and Steve Bischoff, Los Angeles Herald-Examiner; Loel Schrader, Long Beach Press-Telegraph; Bill Hirsch, Boulder Camera.

Free bus service will be available to Cornhusker fans for the first time Saturday. The NU athletic department plans to furnish service between the new State Fairgrounds parking lot and 14th and Vine Streets before and after home games. The service starts at 12:30 p.m.

The University N Club's annual alumni meeting is set for 11 a.m. Saturday at the Cornhusker Hotel. Lincoln's Dick McCashland will be installed as the club's new president.

The committee plans some changes in the Free University this year, according to Marcotte. ASUN, which supports but does not officially control the Free University, appropriated more funds this year than ever before for NFU.

While most of the budget goes for printing and advertising expenses, the committee hopes for a surplus of about $300 to establish a project resource fund. Marcotte said that the money will be available for class projects that have been financially limited in previous years. He cited the lack of funds as another reason for NFU's bad second semester last year.

Another innovation Marcotte hopes to try is an underground publication — not outlined yet — which would carry information about new NFU courses, news, creative writing, and generally sustain interest in NFU throughout the year.

Marcotte pointed out that the semester is really an artificial starting and stopping time for NFU courses.

Southern California sophomore quarterback Jimmy Jones, the sensation who passed for 392 yards and five touchdowns in the Trojan spring game, was declared a doubtful starter Thursday for Saturday's Nebraska game after sustaining a back injury. See story page 4.
