

Planning problems slow construction

Progress of the expansion of the University of Nebraska campus has provided as many drawbacks as it has rewards.

According to Carl Donaldson, the University business manager, vast problems are encountered with every face-lifting project.

An engineering complex is now under construction which, when completed, will relieve crowded conditions in Ferguson, Richards and Stout Halls.

A library addition which would more than double Love Library's present size and offer room for all its volumes under a single roof is in the planning stage.

Hamilton Hall and the Social Science Building are soon to open their doors to students.

Less known, however, are the crises involved with these and other projects. Foremost of these difficulties is the construction worker strike which occurred last spring and lasted well into the summer. As a result of the work stoppage, completion dates for many projects are still months away.

Opening of Hamilton and the remodeled Social Science building, originally scheduled for the first of the semester, has been postponed until after Thanksgiving. Another summer project, the patio north of the Union, is finally getting under way. The interior of Andrews Hall was only recently finished.

Planning also creates headaches.

Long-range expansion plans must be determined well in advance.

"We have to anticipate for every conceivable possibility," said Donaldson. "There are trends we have to provide for."

There is often opposition to such plans. New complexes are either built on parking lot sites, which outrage student car-owners, or they are constructed at some remote end of the campus, which infuriate pedestrian students.

The long-range architectural diagrams frequently ignore existing structures, especially fraternity and sorority houses.

Independent plans are sometimes conflicting. The new mall north from 12th and R Streets will remain incomplete until the proposed library addition is completely done.

A gap near Burnet Hall will remain to allow heavy construction trucks access to the new structure. The eason is practical, but an unfinished walk does provide a certain amount of inconvenience.

Money problem

The biggest problem is, of course, money which is needed from the very inception of any project. Research for land sites, plans and drawings, and finally, actual development must be funded. Funds are not always available.

Construction is more expensive today, Donaldson noted. "It cost about $200,000 to build Richards Hall in 1912.

Swedish film opens series

"Hugs and Kisses," the first of the Nebraska Union foreign film series, will be shown at the Nebraska Theatre, 1144 P Street, Wednesday at 7 and 9 p.m. Admission is by membership only.

The Swedish film presents a good reason for not inviting friends home. When kicked out of the house by his girl friend, would-be author John goes home for dinner with an old friend, Max. Max's wife Eva at first resents John's presence, but his good nature and bumbling attempts at domestic helpfulness win her into insisting that he live with them.

For the next few months all goes well, but John asks Hickman, a typing instructor, to join the group so he can have a woman of his own. Max and Eva decide that Hickman must leave before John becomes too independent, and to that end, frame John into apparent faithlessness. The result is as they desired, but it backfires.

According to a review by the "New Yorker" the film "bogs a bit at times but it is an ingratiating off-beat and perceptive comment on a couple of chic young smugs and an odd-ball friend with whom they form a household. Agneta Ekman, the fashion-model wife, is lovely, the entire cast endearing, and the film as a whole stylish and satisfying."

Style show in Union is set for Thursday

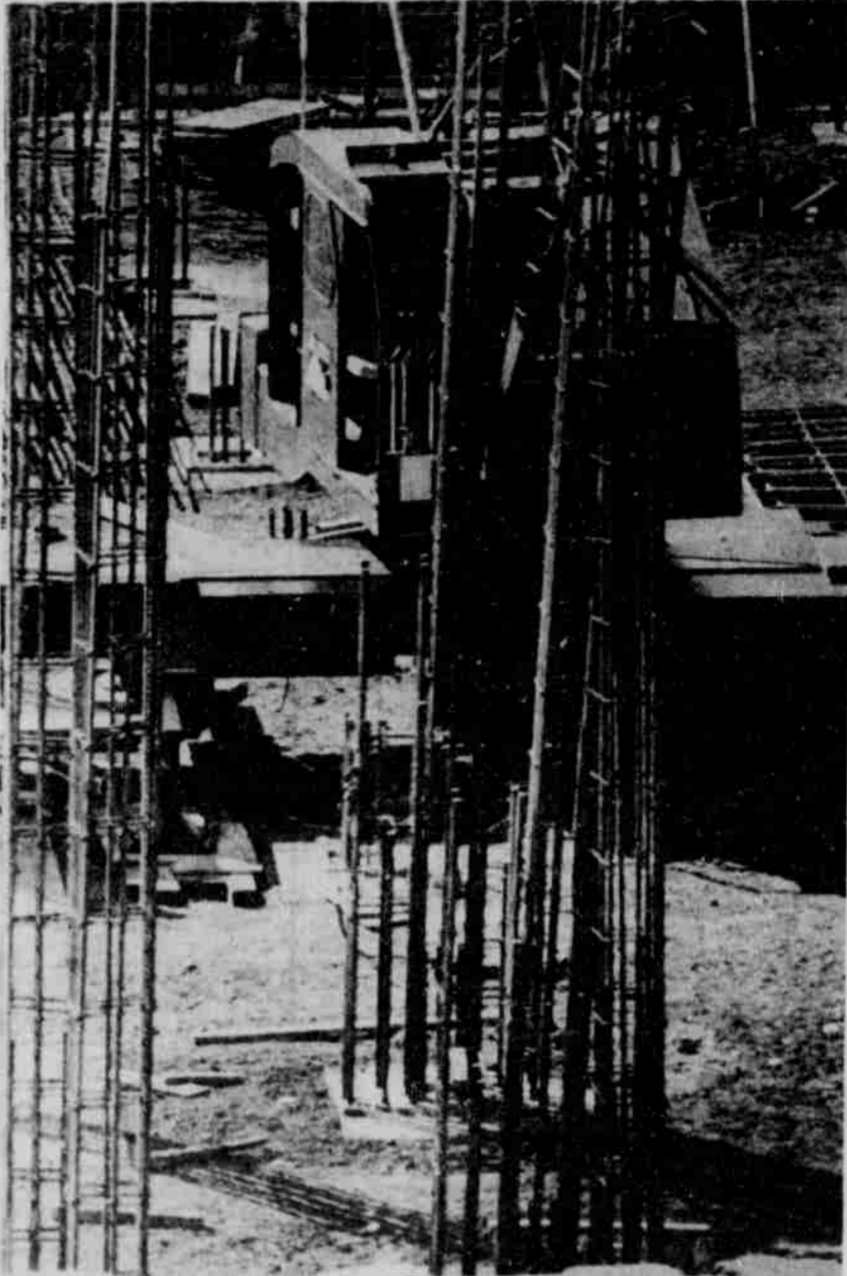

The Union Hospitality Committee will present a style show Thursday, October 2, at 7 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

The theme of the show is "Signs of the Times" and will feature styles geared to the signs of the zodiac.

Fashions will be shown by Quentin's, The Carriage Shop, The Wooden Nickel and Magees. Admission is free and the Vic Lewis Trio will provide entertainment.

Coeds may sign up for open rush in Union

All University women interested in participating in Open Rush may now sign up in the Panhellenic office. The fee is $2.50 for girls participating in rush for the first time.

Current campus construction, including the new engineering complex south of Nebraska Hall, creeps toward completion.
